ing a reply from the United States before making a statement on the Anglo-Japanese Treaty. The most popular view among observers here, the despatch continues, "Is that the distinguished Welsh Man is endeavouring to smooth over the objections raised in the renewal of the treaty by the British Dominions and that he is trying to placate their representative by over emphasizing the importance of the information he expects from this country." But the best information obtainable here, is that reports which have already been sent to the British foreign office would not be of a character which would lend themselves to placating the representatives of the Dominions." Their frequently voiced sentiments that the renewal of the Anglo-Japanese Alliances must be contingent upon approval by this country would naturally lead them it is pointed out here, to vigorous opposition to its renewal when the attitude of this country is made known.
