The Native Brass Band entertained the public with an excellent concert last night.

13th Anniversary

1909---1922

To-day, May 15th, the Native Brass Band of Christiansted enters into its 13th year as a musical organization, and we join with its many friends in wishing for Bandmaster Jackson and his faithful Bandmen many more years of usefulness to the Community, and it is our earnest desire to see their untiring efforts to entertain the public for the past years meet with due reward and higher compensation from the proper source.

On this special occasion the following clipping from "The American Musician" on "The Musician's Duties To The Community" by Roland D. L. Fallin may be of interest to all Bandmen and the general public:—

"Often a musician is asked to play for a few friends, or the church, or a small gathering who would appreciate a few selections, but very often our reply is, 'I'm very busy, and regret my inability to accommodate you.' The musician, more or less, is like a physician. He possesses that which a sick world needs, and as a physician, should go when needed. I have played in most of the churches of Baltimore, Washington and Philadelphia. I have always felt ready to help the missions, without compensation. The joy and richness of life I have received from it inspired me to visualize in poetry. Music is the remedy for many ills. If we were to take the singing from the church you would find empty seats. Or, if man were not brought in contact with any music, I really believe he would become a savage. Man cannot live without music. Even in his savage state he sought the music of rippling brooklets and singing birds; he even tried to imitate it.

Musicians, when folks ask us to play they are sick and need the medicine we have to give. Therefore, let us give it
