burned themselves out, as they are bound to do, we should have something to fall back upon. I should talk to her of her interests, and try to enter into them, just as I should try to make her a real partner in my own affairs.

"I should make her feel every hour of the day that she was the chief thing in my life, and that nothing she did was too little, or unimportant to be of concern to me. I should take the time to tell her of my love, to go with her to the places she enjoyed, and I should surround her with a tenderness that never failed. If I did all this, no doubt I should be able to give her less money and less of the things money buys, but I do not think that she would care.

"If I could go back and live over my married life again I would neglect my business rather than my wife, and I believe that if I did I should not find myself desolate, a lonely man facing a lonely old age, a Darby with no Joan's hand to hold in his—nothing but a bank book."

"True," said one of the women many a wife piles point lace and diamonds over her heart to try to hide its desolation even from her own eyes."—American Paper.
