Islanders tell why they go off island for treatment

I want to live

By JEANNE FRASER BROOKS
Avis Staff Writer

The respondents to the mini-health survey conducted by this paper on Saturday ranged in age from young women of child-bearing age to senior citizens who rely on Medicare.

The number of people who called was disappointingly small. Their cries, however, were loud and almost unanimous.

"I want to live. That's why I went off island for surgery," said one woman.

"I was not going to wind up in a coma as the result of anesthesia administered by God knows who," said another.

One caller who has lived here for 23 years returns to Pennsylvania for all her family's medical care. She cited the lack of proper health care facilities; lack of proper diagnostic equipment; lack of trained personnel to operate, maintain, and repair the equipment; lack of trained personnel to read test results correctly.

"When someone gets sick or hurt on St. Croix all they can do is go to the nearest place to die," she added.

One man who, judging from his voice, was well over 65, voiced the concerns he and his friends share about a hospital managed by the government.

"When I first came here in 1970 St. Croix was a different place. Men like Alva McFarlane and Claude O. Markoe, gentle people, were here then. People cared about others.

"Now we have those who posture and talk a good story and do nothing. People are hired for a job for the number of votes they can bring to a politician, not based on their qualifications.

"When you have caring people it's a different matter."

One of his contemporaries goes to Boston whenever he needs medical care "for two reasons.

"The first is that I have a long-time association with the Lahey Clinic, the second is that the local hospital has a big X on the door, 'No one over 65—Medicare can't be used here.'"

"I want to live. That's why I went off island for surgery," said one woman. "I was not going to wind up in a coma as the result of anesthesia administered by God knows who," said another

A former emergency room patient told of being treated for a minor abrasion following a fender bender.

"Within a week the abrasion was an oozing sore. The doctor gave me a prescription for an antibiotic which wasn't strong enough or administered for sufficient time to destroy the infection.

statehood would end the territory's 'plantation mentality'

By PATRICK ROGERS
Avis Staff Writer

FOCUS ON STATUS OPTIONS

A U.S. presidential candidate comes to the V.I. to woo voters in an election, and when he visits the territory to campaign, he's endorsed or criticized by the ~~territory's~~ two U.S. Senators and Congressman.

That scenario could become reality if local proponents of statehood have their way.

Those pushing for statehood in the September 7 status referendum say that unless the territory becomes a state, Virgin Islanders will never be considered "real U.S. citizens."

If the territory chooses statehood, the V.I.:

-and its citizens will have the right to vote in presidential elections.

-will have political participation in the national government with two U.S. Senators and one Congressman.

-might enjoy greater participation in some federal programs (like Supplementary Security Income which assists certain blind, aged and disabled people)

-will be a full and permanent part of the U.S. with all of the rights, privileges and responsibilities involved.

Statehood advocate Arthur Todman, who publishes the V.I. Statehood Journal from New York, said statehood would help end discrimination against Virgin Islanders on the mainland.

"I've had foreigners come up to me and tell me in New York that I should go back to my country. I tell them I was born in the U.S.V.I. and they don't consider that to be part of the country at all, and they might be naturalized citizens from Santo Domingo, and they're telling me I'm not American?" Todman said.

"Any time you have to explain your citizenship, you're an outsider, it should be automatic," he said.

V.I. statehood would end the territory's "plantation mentality" according to statehood advocate, Herb Schoenbohm.

"Statehood would restate equal treatment under the law; that's the historical imperative for statehood. No longer would we be a ward of the Department of the Interior. As it is now, we're like an Indian reservation," Schoenbohm said.

But if the V.I. becomes a state, it would have to give up some of the tax advantages it enjoys as a territory, according to the V.I. Status Commission.

Federal income taxes wouldn't be kept in the territory and the federal government wouldn't return rum excise taxes to the V.I., according to the Status Commission.

But Schoenbohm said the V.I. would still benefit economically from statehood.

"Those tax dollars would be returned as entitlements. And we could establish duty-free zones here. They have one in Miami," he said.

But even if V.I. Citizens vote for statehood, will the U.S. government admit a tiny trio of tiny Caribbean islands to the union and allow them to wield so much power in Washington?

Schoenbohm said they have to.

"The Dred Scott decision said the U.S.

Creque responds to federal budget cuts

Commissioner of Education Linda Creque Saturday released a June 11, 1993 letter from the acting assistant secretary for elementary and secondary education Mary Jean Letendre commending the V.I. Department of Education for "Excellent progress in obligating (general assistance) funds early in the period of availability and (this) should help ensure that the services are delivered to the students as rapidly as possible."

"This letter underscores the corrective action taken by the Department of Education and the government of the Virgin Islands during the last eighteen months to rectify a situation of expending general assistance funds made acute by the deluge of projects, purchase orders and other spending requirements put on the financial management of the department and the government since 1990," Creque said.

The department has been anticipating a reduction in the general assistance grant since it received a letter and a copy of the USDOE budget from the new Secretary of Education Richard Riley. "The letter asked us to support the president's budget which contained deficit reduction initiatives," Creque said. In that budget the secretary argued that the General Assistance Program to the Virgin Islands should be reduced because of the steady reduction in enrollment in the public schools of the territory.

Secretary Riley's budget message read in part, " the General Assistance Program was established in 1978 as a response to the increasing public school enrollment in the Virgin Islands in the 1970s. By the early 1980s however, the public school enrollment had stabalizing, and by 1991-92 its enrollment had declined, from a high of 26,126 in 1983-84 to 23,344. These statistics suggests that federal assistance to address the strained caused by growing enrollment is no longer warranted." They also alluded to the fact that the local Department of Education is receiving millions of dollars under other federal programs as an additional reason for their recommended reduction. "The VI DOE does not support the federal government's reasoning," Creque stressed, "Because there are other factors that have to been taken into consideration.

However, it is quite obvious that with the national thrust of deficit reduction reasons must be found to support spending cuts."

This is the case in the House report which states that $7 million of prior year appropriations remains "unspent." "If this amount refers to general assistance monies it is inaccurate," Creque stated.

"Under the leadership of Gov. Farrelly and the assistance of key agencies and executive and department staff, the department has drawn down or spent approximately $4 million. According to department records, as of June 1993, there is approximately $3.6 million obligated for the purchase of materials, supplies, equipment and construction projects.

The remaining $200,000 will be spent on summer programs and projects and will be obligated by Sept. 30 1993. The impression that the department has $7 million left to spend in general assistance is erroneous Creque stated.

"No one in Washington contacted us during this latest budgetary process. If that had been done we would have been able to clarify and provide additional updated information," Creque said.

"This territory has used the General Assistance Fund successfully to upgrade vocational, science and math labs, to build cisterns and classrooms and provide materials, supplies and computer technology throughout the schools of the territory. Since 1991, this territory has spent over $9 million in general assistance monies Creque said.

Commenting on recent media reports, the commissioner cautioned all concerned that this is not the time for "the shame and blame game" or politicizing. "What is happening and what will continue to happen is the stark reality of the difficult economic condition of the country as the new administration tries to reverse the recessionary economy and cut deficit spending," the commissioner stressed.

"For its part, the VI Department of Education will continue to apply for other grants from both federal and private sources to make up for any shortfall in present funding. We must continue to improve education in the territory in an atmosphere free of acrimony," Commissioner Creque concluded.

Potter calls for hospitality training center in V.I.

Senator Osbert Potter, Chairman of the 20th Legislature's Committee on Economic Development, Agriculture, and Consumer Protection has been away on annual training with the V.I. National Guard. Potter, who is a Captain with the guard has been on the island of St. Lucia as part of the Operation Tradewinds Team. The operation's primary mission is to upgrade the areas Regional Security System. Upon leaving St. Lucia, Sen. Potter will travel to Barbados where he has been invited to tour the island's world renowned Hospitality Training Institutions. According to Potter, "It is time for us to seriously consider developing our own hospitality training center. If we are to remain competitive in the tourism industry the V.I. must move post haste to develop an on-going training program. This will ensure that there is always a Pool of highly skilled Virgin Islanders who can readily be employed at all levels of the Tourism Industry. They must see themselves as having a critical role to play in the industry's survival." To this end, Sen. Potter has proposed legislation that would authorize the V.I. Government to actively move towards identifying a site that would adequately accommodate a major hospitality training center in the territory. Potter concluded, that if this proposal is to materialize, it will take a collaborative effort from government, hotel personnel, and other pertinent industry officials.

Keeping In Touch With My People!

I think it is time to clarify the perception that I continue to be the Chairman of the Public Works Committee with oversight over WAPA. This tenure was only held during the 19th Legislature.

Yes, I can understand how I may have led you to believe that I continue to hold the Twentieth Legislature leadership (chairman), of the Public Works Committee, due to my continued aggressive action in these areas, especially, as I continue to move progress towards issues like the Mon Bijou flood control projects and mass transit bus system of St. Croix, and my recent battle against disconnection of street light on St. Croix. I may be at fault into leading the community's thinking that these issues fall under my jurisdiction — not so.

A blistering letter, first commending me for bringing to the public's attention the silent disconnection of St. Croix street lights, and then working towards resolving the problem; however, highly criticized for not calling in the public officials into the Legislature for an answer and getting both Public Works Commissioner Leo Francis, and WAPA Director, Alberto Bruno-Vega on record on the street light issue, and as suggested, to avoid a major problem.

Well, although I think the criticism is constructive, it was sent to the wrong office. The fact is, that I am not the Legislature's chairman, with jurisdiction over WAPA, nor Public Works. In fact, I want to believe that the majority of the people recognize by now, that this type of issue could not have escaped the scrutiny of my committee, if it was under my jurisdiction. The public's cry would have to be heard loud and clear, and the department head of Public Works, and WAPA, would have been given some serious answers; and in fact, with sufficient pressure applied, a reverse in the decision, would have been nothing unusual.

For information purposes, the following departments are under one legislative committee called Government Operations, and the jurisdiction of a freshman senator and vice president; Government Employees Retirement System, Property and Procurement, Public Safety, Lottery, Correction, Port Authority, Department of Justice, and to include Public Works, and WAPA.

Any issue in which I am involved is only at my initiative, and not as chairman of any legislative committee — I have none. However, you can continue to post your calls to my office as you continue to help me to be vigilant of any disconnection of St. Croix street lights in your area, so that I can continue to address the affected areas successfully with the Department of Public Works, which I may add has been very cooperative, and has helped me bring about positive results on behalf of the community.

Exercise Tradewinds '93

VIEUX FORT, ST. LUCIA - Unified cooperation among international military and police forces is imperative to battle the drug trade and to ensure world security, Prime Minister John Compton announced Friday.

Addressing troops and diplomats from 11 Caribbean nations, the United States and the United Kingdom at the close of regional military and police exercises, Compton said narcotics trafficking endangers international security.

"Our new enemies respect no frontiers - their principal weapon is money - I refer to traffickers in narcotics," he said. "The drug trade has grown so powerful that it challenges not only our local governments, but the entire international community.

"This enemy must be confronted through regional and international communication and the exchange of information," Compton said.

The more than 700 troops here - including the Virgin Islands National Guard for logistical support - spent the past week in the last phase of Tradewinds '93, the seventh annual set of Caribbean exercises for the Regional Security System.

The RSS is a Barbados-based organization of seven Caribbean islands designed to promote unified and quick regional response to natural disasters, military and civil emergencies.

Maj. Gen. Charles Hood, representing VING and the U.S. Atlantic Command's planning and policy director, told troops the 1990s bring them new challenges.

"In the post-Cold War environment, the requirement for strong cooperation within the Caribbean will be greater than ever before," he said. "The threats to the region for the balance of the decade are very real: narcotics, natural disasters, mass migration and the state of economies around the world. These and other threats demand an unprecedented level of teamwork."

The RSS forces responded in this year's exercises to a simulated South American drug ring's assault on St. Lucia.

The simulation had traffickers using the island as a shipping point for narcotics between South America and the United States.

Besides the member countries, Tradewinds '93 included participation by the United States and United Kingdom and observation by Belize, Guyana, Jamaica, the Bahamas, and Trinidad and Tobago.

Exercise coordinators said they hope in the future Venezuela and Colombian forces will participate.

Brig. Gen. Rudyard Lewis, Chief of Staff for the Barbados Defense Force and RSS security coordinator said the exercises were a success.

"The System has grown each year, and our experiences have brought developments and new challenges," he said. "We must now implement the lessons learned."

Compton said participation by American and British troops attests to their commitment to helping the Caribbean.

"It has been testimony that if we are faced with an emergency, whether it's a natural disaster, military or other threat, we are not alone," Compton said.

But he said Caribbean neighboring islands need to join forces in conjunction with outside help.

"We're friends through history and geographical proximity," Compton said. "Though the Caribbean is considered America's backyard, we always have to be on the

DIALYSIS:

The need for treatment controls a patient's life

By JEANNE FRASER BROOKS
Avis Staff Writer

White noise fills the dialysis unit at the St. Croix Hospital. The soft hum of the machines, the quiet movements of the nursing staff, the gentle breaths of dozing patients all contribute to the sense of life in a room where death is put off for yet another day.

The most common reasons for kidney failure requiring dialysis support are hypertension (high blood pressure) and diabetes mellitus.

"Kidney failure doesn't happen overnight," said Dr. J. Charles Perez who is in charge of the dialysis unit. "In the case of hypertension, it's a long process that occurs over the years in a person who fails to follow a healthful lifestyle."

Proper diet and exercise greatly reduce the incidences of high blood pressure which left untreated can result in kidney failure.

By definition, dialysis is the movement of a liquid solution made up of water and another ingredient (chosen based on the toxins in the blood which have caused the failure) through a semipermeable membrane (the dialyzer) which separates the patient's blood from the solution.

Three processes occur simultaneously during dialysis:

- diffusion which is the intermingling of the dialysate (solution) and the blood;

- ultrafiltration which is the removal of toxins from the blood; and - osmosis which is the solution passing through the membrane allowing for the removal of toxins.

The method most commonly used for treatment is hemo-dialysis, a technique pioneered by Wilhelm Kolff in 1940. It was first used by Belding Scribner in 1960 for patients suffering with chronic renal (kidney) failure.

Nationally, there are approximately 100,000 patients receiving this treatment. The Virgin Islands have approximately 60 such patients.

Once a patient is put on hemodialysis the only way to stop the treatment is through a kidney transplant. The need for the treatment controls a patient's life.

"Each one must come in three times a week and plan on being here from three and a half to four hours each time," said Perez.

A patient's blood is removed and run through the semipermeable membrane, in essence, an artificial kidney, opposite the dialysate in a countercurrent direction for maximum removal of the solute which contains the toxic buildup.

There are several indicators which can lead to a doctor's decision to put a patient on hemodialysis: high serum potassium which causes heart arrythmia; high body volume which can produce pulmonary edema (shortness of breath); acid buildup in the blood which results in mental confusion; toxic buildup in the blood which leads to lethargy; or toxin exposure/overdose as the result of drugs or radiocontrast agents.

In some instances, however, doctors will not recommend hemo-dialysis even when one of the above indications is present.

"If a patient also has a terminal disease, why use a limited resource to prolong a life that will end soon because of another disease? That resource must be used for a life not so threatened," said Perez.

Hypotension, low blood pressure, and irreversible decreasing brain function are other contraindications for hemo-dialysis.

Vitema to ensure V.I. is prepared for hurricanes

By PATRICK ROGERS
Avis Staff Writer

Virgin Islands Territorial Emergency Management Agency will meet with private sector leaders this week to make sure both the government and business is prepared for what might be an active hurricane season.

Representatives from FEMA's Caribbean Area Office and the National Hurricane Center in Miami will update government and private sector leaders on hurricane preparedness and VITEMA will "present an overview of the accomplishments the Territorial Departments have made towards increasing the territory's ability to respond to disasters," according to a VITEMA release.

An Army Corp engineer will tell VITEMA about the progress of the Hurricane preparedness being done for the V.I.

Private and public sector members will also go over lessons learned from Hurricane Hugo.

Disaster management officials might have their hands full this hurricane season, according to those in the business of predicting weather patterns.

Two intense hurricanes might visit Atlantic Basin in 1993, says Colorado State University Professor of Atmospheric Science William M. Gray.

The hurricane season averages 2.2 intense hurricanes a year. However, the basin, which includes the Atlantic Ocean, the Caribbean Sea and the Gulf of Mexico, will surpass the total hurricane average of 5.9 a year, he said in his June 1993 forecast of Atlantic Seasonal Hurricane Activity.

"I'd say we'll see somewhat more hurricanes, but fewer intense hurricanes this year than we do statistically on an annual basis," he said.

In addition, 11 named storms may occur this hurricane season.

"The coming hurricane season is expected to be somewhat analogous to the 1990 hurricane season which had a large number of name storms (14) and hurricanes (8) but only one intense hurricane."

However, Gray said he cannot predict where or if hurricanes will come across land.

Gray, who has presented hurricane forecasts for 10 seasons, studied West African rainfall, the equatorial stratospheric winds at two levels, and the strength or weakness of El Nino, the warm-water pattern off the west coast of Peru.

In addition, Caribbean and West African barometric pressure and temperature readings aided his predictions.

"We are looking at the factors we know will have an impact on hurricane formation," he said. "We look for the global and regional patterns that enable us to predict what will happen with some degree of accuracy."

Gray correctly predicted the three hurricanes and one severe hurricane last year in his June 1992 forecast. The one severe hurricane was Andrew.

SUNDAY/MONDAY, JUNE 27-28, 1993 No. 149

EDITORIAL:

AMERICA NEEDS A FOREIGN POLICY OF PEACE, NOT WAR

As capitol Hill bickered over President Clinton's economic program recently, a more dangerous debate raged in Foggy bottom.

The topic: Now that the communists are beaten, what should we, the United States, be doing in the world? One official, Undersecretary of State Peter Tarnoff, said the U.S. should limit its "rules of engagement" globally; we should use our power sparingly. Secretary of State Warren Christopher disagreed; the world's lone superpower, he said, should act like one.

What's stupid in this argument is the suggestion that we, the world's greatest arsenal of economic, political, military and — yes! — intellectual power, can figure just two approaches to foreign policy: feeble isolationism and military conquest.

This is where the Reagan-Bush legacy has taken us. Lebanon. Grenada. Panama. Iraq.

After feeding on a relentless diet of bite-sized wars, Americans have forgotten the diplomatic failures which preceded them.

Yes, no matter what the hawks might suggest, it is not a choice between global militarism and crass isolationism. The record shows that we Americans do some of our best work overseas without killing anyone.

We are reminded of this critical fact by the newly published memoirs of veteran U.S. diplomat Philip Kaiser. What jumps out at the reader of "Journeying Far and Wide" is what this country's most dedicated ambassadors can accomplish, especially when they're backed up by interested presidents back home.

Kaiser was John F. Kennedy's ambassador to Mauritania. At his first Oval office meeting with JFK, he describes how Kennedy began the talk: "Now, in regard to Mongolia."

When Kaiser jumped to correct his new boss, Kennedy made clear he meant exactly what he'd said. The Soviet Union had voted against Mauritania's application to join the United Nations. Formosa had voted against Outer Mongolia's.

Kennedy saw a deal in the works. Since the countries of black Africa wanted Mauritania in the U.N., and the Soviet Union wanted Mongolia in, the United States could keep everyone happy by getting Formosa to abstain on Mongolia and the Soviets to vote "Yes" on Mauritania.

Besides, if the U.S. didn't pull off this deal - which it did - the black African states would have voted to let communist China into the U.N., something we very much didn't want to happen back in the Cold War '60s.

Thanks to Kennedy and Kaiser, the United States pulled it off. As part of his human rights campaign, President Carter had a policy of "differentiating" among the countries of the communist bloc. Those that this promoted greater personal freedom were rewarded.

Thanks to Kaiser's diplomatic efforts in both Washington and Budapest, which included getting Budapest to agree to free immigration of Jews and others seeking to leave Hungary, the Crown of St. Stephen was returned to its homeland and U.S. - Hungarian relations flourished. When the Iron Curtain opened a decade later, it was Hungary that took the fateful step of letting East Germans escape to the West, thereby rendering the Berlin Wall obsolete.

Did diplomacy smooth the way? It's a hard question. But a far better question than the one predictably asked whenever countries resort to conflict: could diplomacy have prevented this?

Due to asterism, Croix willingly share his income from Mr. Hess, Mr. Rum, and the Madam Agriculture. However, in recent times Croix has, realized that, in spite of his kindness he is being treated like a step child. Therefore, Croix is considering a divorce, because he believe that he can be more prosperous as an independent guy.

Sylvia Peters... an Upward Bound student

Be it resolved that St. Croix should seek autonomy from St. Thomas. In order to understand, why I support this resolution you must understand the key word, autonomy. According to the Webster dictionary autonomy refers to the right to self government or independence.

I support autonomy for St. Croix for many reasons which I am sure that you too my intelligent readers will agree with me. Ladies and gentlemen I believe that St. Croix should seek autonomy from St. Thomas due to the fact that St. Croix have been neglected for so long. We are all aware that St. Thomas have been getting the majority of support to improve their island.

In my presentation, I intend to prove to you by way of facts that St. Croix should seek autonomy from St. Thomas. If St. Croix should gain autonomy from St. Thomas, our nightmares will be over. Our own Governor, senators, and our own representative will be elected, to look over St. Croix affairs.

St. Croix is more spacious and more beautiful, and if developed properly it will soon take over St. Thomas in the tourist industry and commerce.

I predict that if we are granted autonomy (1) our dirty beaches will be maintained better than the ones in St. Thomas and St. John. (2) Frederiksted will turn into an attractive city instead of its present ghost town appearance. (3) all businesses will be over flowing with money, and young people will be able to get jobs after completion of college.

With that increased income St. Croix can look forward to building a stadium where international sporting events would take place and bring resources to the island. Most of all investors will no longer hesitate to invest, since St. Croix will be over flowing with tourist.

With monies over flowing, our hospital and medical facilities will be well maintained, we will not have to share with St. Thomas. St. Thomas, on the other hand will be history, and the least of St. Croix worries.

Ladies and gentlemen, the education system presently is in disarray mainly because St. Thomas is always first to receive assistance in education. Our schools here on St. Croix are lacking teachers and school supplies most of the time teachers have to use their own money or raise funds to buy supplies for their classes.

The library facilities on St. Thomas are all in operation while those on St. Croix which were destroyed by Hugo on September 17, 1989 are patiently awaiting their replacement. As quoted from the Virgin Island Business Journal dated May 10 to May 16, 1993 on St. Thomas the hospital is "certified, receiving Medicaid and Medicare, and given financial preference." On St. Croix however, the facility is" uncertified, with no Medicaid or Medicare, and no equipment." "New terminal, new runway" for St. Thomas, notes the organization. On St. Croix "waiting for refurbishment. St. Thomas gets five to eight cruise ships daily, St. Croix only two to three ships per week, maintains the group and of vote.

I am not alone in this thought. In an article carried by the Avis of May 14, 1993, and written to Dear Editor the author said that St. Croix has a way out of this strange hold. He advocated that municipal government would give Crucians a fighting chance we never had. Every investor dollar for instance gets the scrutiny of the St. Thomas dominated board of one kind or another. Every federal dollar must first pass through the St. Thomas bureaucratic neck before it trickles down to St. Croix. Municipal government will give St. Croix the opportunity to set its own priorities and also to negotiate for its own public and private sector dollars.

Ladies and gentlemen St. Croix has been struggling for years to put together an economy built on tourism, manufacturing and agriculture. All this with meagre resources and a broken down infrastructure. St. Croix needs to be able to create its own opportunities, to be able to go after its own federal grants and loans for education, economic incentives, planning and development. We need our own local agency of government to plan our socio-economic future through encouragement of private capital for St. Croix.

In an article carried by the Virgin Island Business Journal of May 10 to May 16, 1993 Greg Miller, stated and I quoted, one thing that could help tremendously in getting St. Croix back on its feet is a major motion picture doing, a shot there, something would actually be on the horizon. Although no decision has yet been made, one film company is seriously considering St. Croix for use in its motion picture end of quote. Mr. Miller explained that if a film industry infrastructure could be established on the island, it could bring substantial economic benefits.

For example ladies and gentlemen if we were to have a film industry infrastructure on the island, the income from this major motion picture will not only be for St. Croix but instead we will have to share with St. Thomas and St. John. But on the other hand, if we are granted autonomy this income would not have to be shared but it would be for St. Croix and for St. Croix only.

Another very important issue that has encouraged me to make the suggestion that St. Croix should seek autonomy over St. Thomas is infact that St. Croix has inhabited the second largest oil refinery in the world, Hess Oil Corporation. Such a large and rich industry to my knowledge should have helped St. Croix to become a fast going commercial island with a stable economy.

As a result of my extensive research I assume that the present organic act is the core of our problems on St. Croix. In other word, the organic act, has prevented Hess Oil Corporation

Know when to fold'em

BY MARIANNE MEANS

It is said that in politics as in poker, you have to know when to hold'em and know when to fold'em.

That's the choice President Clinton faced with Lani Guinier, his controversial nominee to be assistant attorney general for civil right. Keeping on was not in the cards.

Clinton will take some lumps for not standing by her, he has already been called panicky for even thinking about withdrawing her nomination.

But it is never a mistake for a president to put his own interest first.

The real mistakes were made earlier, when the White House let criticism mount for more than a month without raising a defense on her behalf, and when she was selected in the first place without a thorough examination of her legal views.

The bottom line for every administration must be how useful, for whatever reason, any appointee can be to the president and his goals. And a nasty confirmation fight, even if eventually won, would handicap Guinier's ability to function effectively in a post often at the center of contentious racial issues.

Running from Guiner before she had a full hearing before the Senate is not fair to her. The country has not heard her own interpretation of what her theories about empowering minorities really mean.

But nobody ever said life was fair. William Bradford Reynolds breezed through Senate confirmation for that same Justice Department job a dozen years ago despite views about undercutting civil rights more radical on the right than Guiner's theories about expanding them on the left.

The conservatives trashed her, in part because they are still seeking revenge for the senate rejection of Robert Bork for the Supreme Court. But she really got in trouble because her arguments about stacking the deck to allow minorities the power to prevent majority rule disturbed many fair minded senators as well.

Now the official White House version is that the president never actually read any of the scholarly writings in question before her nomination and disagree with some of their points. Yet Guinier was at Yale Law School with the Clintons, and they are old friends; if the president didn't know her views before he picked her, he certainly should have.

An angry fight over quotas and civil rights is not something the president needs right now. Guinier can be replaced by another, more philosophically acceptable nominee. But the political capital that would be lost in such a battle could not be replaced.

President George Bush, for instance, wiped out much of his early good will on Capitol Hill by insisting upon going to the mat for his nominee to be Secretary of Defense, John Tower, who lost anyway. The bitterness generated by Bush's unwillingness to heed senate warnings was as lasting as it was unnecessary.

Usually, presidents prefer to avoid such confrontations. President Carter reacted in the traditional manner when he promptly shoved his CIA nominee, Ted Sorensen, out the door after strong opposition developed over Sorensen's lack of intelligence experience.

Similarly, Clinton dumped two flawed nominees for attorney general before he found Janet Reno, the surprise superstar of his Cabinet. There was an enormous fuss at the time, but the damage was temporary and we have moved on to other things.

The fact is Clinton has other fish to fry more important that the career advancement of lani Guinier.

There is, for openers, his own career.

His polls are dangerously low.

He is trying awkardly to move to the middle.

He is having trouble keeping the political focus on his economic program, meant to be the keystone of his administration. His health reforms are so controversial they are being delayed until his economic package can be dealt with.

It is better to back off Guinier now than allow the Senate to get into a tizzy over a distracting issue sure to reinforce the impression that Clinton is losing control of his agenda.

The cost of doing this may be to seem, at least briefly as though he bows too often to Congress.

But that cost is affordable. A U.S. News and World Report poll this week shows only 41 percent approve of the job he is doing while 48 percent disapprove.

But their problems with him are not due to his

VIEWPOINT

Your basic three-ring circus

BY LEWIS GRIZZARD

I'm making plans to be out of the city of Atlanta during the summer of 1996.

Maybe I'll go to Idaho. I've been to Idaho before and it's a lovely state.

Twice, I've been down the Middle Fork of the Salmon River in Idaho on week-long white water rafting trips. What made the trips extra delightful is nobody brought along a radio, and you certainly couldn't get your hands on a newspaper.

So if wars were being declared, if scientists were finding something new that would kill you, or if Congress was doing something else to waste money, you wouldn't know about it and could continue to enjoy the greatest outdoors I've ever visited in the great outdoors.

Why have I decided to leave town during the summer of 1996? You know why.

That's when the Olympics are coming to Atlanta, and if the way planning for the Games has gone is any indication of how they will be run, it's going to be one big cluster-muck.

You can't find cluster-muck in a dictionary because it's a word I made up. I would say it means what a Chinese fire drill looks like, but you can't say things like that any more because they are politically incorrect.

So let's go with cluster-muck, meaning a lot of people running around like chickens with their heads cut off, and I probably will get a lot of letters from irate chickens.

If Billy Payne, whose vision and effort brought the Games to Atlanta in the first place, would have been given complete control of putting them on, a cluster-muck might have been avoided.

But the politicians got involved and when that happens, prepare thyself for much bickering, power struggling and chaos.

A new Olympic stadium, to be the future home of the Atlanta Braves, should at least have had its foundation poured by now, but county commissioners squabbled with the Braves over this, that and the other, causing construction delays.

Then, you throw in complaints from neighborhoods near the stadium site, and who knows when work will begin.

Of course race got involved, as it seems to in nearly every aspect of life in Atlanta.

But how about this twist:

A black resident of one of the neighborhoods who are against building the new stadiums said, "We talk about the white man discriminating against us.

The white man doesn't have to do it because the blacks do it for him."

In case you haven't noticed most Atlanta politicians are black.

Augusta National Golf Club offered its hallowed grounds for an Olympic golf competition.

Golfers from all over the world would have had the opportunity to compete on probably the most revered golf course in the world.

The Atlanta City Council didn't care about any of that. All it knew was Augusta National has only one black member, so we had another race-related stink, and the idea of Olympic golf on Bobby Jones' golf course Bobby Jones' home state was shanked.

you got the County Commission, the City Council and the mayor's office jockeying for position and power.

Your basic three-ringed circus.

And, as Sports Illustrated said about Atlanta's pre-Olympic troubles, the clock just keeps on ticking.

"There are deep divisions remaining in this community about how we are going to proceed about hosting the Olympic Games," said the county commission chairman.

What was your first clue, Dick Tracy?

Maybe I'll go to Australia.

This thing may be so cluster-mucked by the summer of '96, the Olympic marathon will be run backwards.

Slaughter celebrates Santeria's right to sacrifice animals

By RICHARD COLE

MIAMI BEACH, Fla. (AP) - A Santeria high priest slit the throats of hogtied beasts Saturday in a ritual sacrifice of 19 animals.

He poked a steak knife through the throat of larger animals - a black ram and two goats - then sawed through vocal cords and arteries until blood spurted.

The rare public ceremony gave thanks for a U.S. Supreme Court ruling that a city ordinance barring animal slaughter unconstitutionally interfered with the Afro-Caribbean religion.

"What before we had to hide, now we can do in the open," Rigoberto Zamora said after pouring ram's blood over an altar dedicated to his patron deity, Chango. "We feel different now - but we have always done this, legal or not."

The animals will be eaten Sunday at a celebration feast, he said.

One of Zamora's purposes was to show the world that the religion's ritual sacrifice was humane - that the animals were not tortured or abused.

For smaller birds, Zamora - a self-described "babalawo," or high priest -simply twisted off their heads after a short prayer.

The blood was poured into offering bowls for different saints, each containing objects such as animal teeth, a tiny gun and imitation axes - the symbol of Chango, the god of virility and lightning. An assistant poured honey and sugar cane liquor over the blood.

Outside the small apartment complex where Zamora lives and conducted the sacrifices, 40 demonstrators from People for the Ethical Treatment of Animals protested.

"Stop the torture, stop the pain, Santeria is insane!" the group chanted.

A dozen police officers kept protesters away from the sacrifice and did nothing to interfere, even keeping Zamora's unhappy landlord from confronting the priest.

Other Santeria priests condemned the public slaughter. Many question Zamora's credentials as a santero, a Santeria priest, saying his ordination has never been confirmed.

Ernesto Pichardo of the Church of the Lukumi Babalu Aye filed a lawsuit challenging a ban on ritual animal sacrifices imposed by Hialeah, a Miami suburb. The lawsuit led to the Supreme Court decision on June 11. Pichardo said Santeria elders met in December and voted unanimously to keep sacrifices private.

"Public offering of animals is offensive to our traditions and violates the privacy of the ritual," Pichardo said. "And it's our belief that it offends the sensibilities of the community at large."

The church, he said, is not looking for confrontations.

Other kinds of clashes, however, may be in the offing as the religion grows in popularity, with estimates as high as 70,000 followers in south Florida and 800,000 around the nation.

Santeria is rooted in the pantheistic belief system of the Yoruba tribe in West Africa, said Mercedes Sandoval, a Miami-Dade Community College anthropology professor who studies the religion.

Slaves carried it to the New World, where it combined with Christianity and spread to Brazil, Haiti, Cuba and other nations, taking on varying forms and names, including voodoo and macumba.

In Cuba, Santeria was initially practiced almost exclusively in black communities, Sandoval said.

But the mostly white migration to Miami after Fidel Castro's revolution brought along the religion, which strengthened in exile, she said. "Cubans had a sense of uprootedness, of loss, of shock," she said. "In situat s like these, a lot of people try magical systems." Other Latin Americans reaching Miami also felt the same sense of dislocation, and were attracted to Santeria.

Cuba signs pacts with Russia, Germany, reaches out to U.S.

By JOHN RICE

MEXICO CITY (AP) - Cuba offered some conciliatory words to the United States Friday, continuing a recent trend to improve relations with its old foe.

Cuba also took steps Friday to improve relations with China and two former Communist allies.

"We observe with great respect the way in which (U.S. officials) are acting toward us," Cuban Foreign Minister Roberto Robaina told a news conference in Beijing, where he had held talks on expanding Chinese-Cuban relations. He was quoted by the official Prensa Latina news agency.

"At this moment, we are not a priority for the current U.S. administration," Robaina said. But he added, "We are pleased to see that it is not using language as aggressive as that of the (Bush) government."

Cuba repeated its willingness to cooperate with the United States on drug matters, even as U.S. officials investigate reports that top Cuban officials have been involved in the drug trade.

Prensa Latina said Cuban and German officials had agreed in Bonn to analyze treaties between Cuba and East Germany, which merged with capitalist West Germany in 1990. Among the agreements to be studied were pacts concerning economic cooperation.

Meanwhile, Cuban and Russian officials signed an agreement in Havana "to broaden the ties of cooperation." The agency did not elaborate.

The Soviet Union was Cuba's primary trade partner and benefactor from the 1960s until 1990. Russia's decision to base trade on market prices, ending decades of subsidies, has devastated Cuba's economy and left it severely short of oil.

In China, Robaina said Cuba and China had taken steps to improve already-good relations. There were few details about agreements made during his week-long tour.

He repeated Cuban demands for an end to the 30-year U.S. trade embargo of the island, removal of the U.S. naval base at Guantanamo Bay and an end to U.S. government propaganda broadcasts toward Cuba.

In Washington, meanwhile, the House Appropriations Committee voted to restore $8 million in funding for Radio Marti, which broadcasts to Cuba.

Trinidad capital offered as a venue for Haiti talks

By LINDSAY MACKOON,
Avis Correspondent

PORT OF SPAIN - This southern Caribbean city has been offered as a venue for mediation talks between deposed Haitian president Jean Bertrand Aristide and military strongman Raul Cedras, Prime Minister Patrick Manning said here yesterday.

Addressing a news conference, the Trinidad and Tobago leader stated the Haitian problem posed a threat to democracy in the rest of the Caribbean.

Manning, current chairman of the Caribbean Community (Caricom), said at last week's Caricom Bureau meeting held on the island of Nevis, it was decided that since Haiti was part of the Caribbean, "it was best the talks be held in the region."

"We believe the recent decision of the Security Council of the United Nations (in imposing an oil and an economic boycott against Haiti) had been promoted largely by the actions of Caricom states to the Organization of American States and the Security Council," he stated.

He continued:"As a result, both sides are now willing to talk to each other. But they are arguing over where they should meet. My government has offered Port of Spain as a venue for the talks," Prime Minister Manning told reporters.

Army chief promises good news but U.N. talks could end his power

By MICHAEL NORTON

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti (AP) - Haiti's military chief has promised to return from U.N. talks with good news even though the meeting's goal - to restore democracy to the battered country - would end his 16-year grip on the country's affairs.

Lt. Gen. Raoul Cedras said he agreed to the meeting, beginning Sunday on New York's Governors Island, to prevent the ruin of Haiti, which is reeling under a worldwide oil and weapons embargo.

"The country could come under a blockade. Gasoline will not be imported. Food will run out, children will die," Cedras said in a nationally broadcast address in Haiti on Friday.

"I will return with good news, no matter what," he said.

Exiled President Jean Bertrand Aristide, the country's first democratically elected president, has insisted that a date be set for his quick return, and that Cedras and other top officers, including the powerful police chief, Col. Joseph Michel Francois, agree to resign.

Aristide was ousted by a military coup in September 1991.

An activist Roman Catholic priest, he remains wildly popular among Haiti's poor majority. But he is despised by the army and a conservative elite, who fear his return could unleash a bloody wave of reprisals.

The talks may last a few days and will be mediated by U.N. special envoy Dante Caputo. They will probably take place on an island in New York harbor because of security concerns, U.N. sources have said.

'What's a nice country like you doing in a state like this'

WEEKEND LEISURE WITH PETER L. DES JARDINS

Theatre on St. Croix is alive and well.

The cast of "Dance Bongo" has returned from the national competition of the American Association of Community Theatres. While they didn't come back with first prize, they did acheive a high rating and were given two awards, one for reaching the finals and one for set design. They have also received invitations to perform internationally.

Considering the play switched from Island Center sponsorship to the Courtyard Players, lost cast members midstream to pro ranks in the states, and had to raise all of their own funds to travel to participate, we owe the island community a tip of the hat, and Julia Lowe and the cast and a standing ovation for giving us a production to be proud of.

Island Center finished a two weekend run of "Into the Woods" last night. Another outstanding production from the crew that brought you "Noises Off", and has been doing a fine job filling in at Island Center between regimes.

The Rogue's Gallery Pizza Theatre debuted "Breaking Legs" this weekend. It will play for two more weekends.

With all of the negative impressions of the Hess Cat Cracker Army of Occupation that has invaded us, you have to keep your eye on the good side as well.

In the cast of "Breaking Legs" you'll find Julien Mars, a Cajun from Louisiana who first joined the local theatre crowd with the production crew of "Camelot" at Island Center, moved on stage in the CCT production of "Best Little Whore House in Texas", and now brings his macho presence to the Rogues. In between stints at Hess, he's done production work in Hollywood and commercial work in New Orleans.

Also in the cast, you'll find Wayne Pierson, another "Camelot" beginner, who started out as Sir Lancelot's stand-in and now is seen frequently in productions all over town. While he's been doing cabinetry and other work on the island for years, he's now part of the Hess crowd, trying to make hay while the sun shines.

Add community theatre stalwards like Billy Gibbons, Walt Julio and Rogues owner Dennis Gribbin for experience, then grab a waitress from the floor (did godfather Dino Gribbino make her an offer she couldn't refuse?) and you've got a cast.

"What's a Nice Country Like You Doing in a State Like This?" is in rehearsal at the Buccaneer. This show, the next production on the schedule for The Caribbean Community Theatre, is a political satire in song that some say should have been put on during the last election.

I ran into cast members Frank Sluss and Glenn Wells last night at the 5 Corners Deli, grabbing a quick breakfast after rehearsals.

Is the 5 Corners Deli the Sardi's of St. Croix?

"Look, there's Snoopy and Buffallo Bill in the corner booth."

Chuck Baxter, another regular on the boards was table hopping.

"I'm not performing right now..." he said, making the usual big city talk... being between shows and staying busy... show business gossip about John Rueck's cat and others in the theatre clique. Like so much of the island, Chuck is currently performing at Hess until another cat is done.

Today, Sunday, from 3 p.m., "Island Stylin", a showcase of Crucian creativity will take place poolside at the Beeston Hill Sports Bar at the Caribbean Health and Racquet Club. The island's top designers and some of our more obscure creators will be featured, from Yemaya's hand dyed silks and Ralph Wilson's Aura Cosmetics through new designs in jewelry from Shelly Silverlight, African inspired styles from Macah and Charles Durant, summer styles from Java Wraps and Simply Cotton and more will take to the runway for an overview of St. Croix style.

Add the music of the Midnight Band and you'll have a pleasant, cultured way to spend the late afternoon.

Former island resident Ronnie Benjamin Sr. was at 2+2 last night.

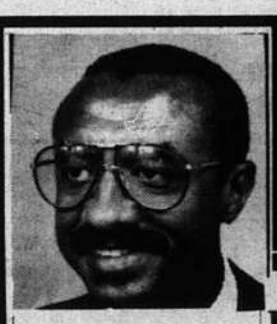

Since moving Sunburst Studios from St. Croix to Antigua a few years ago, he's been successful enough recording and perfoming, that he's upgrading from 24 to 32 tracks.

20TH LEGISLATURE AGENDA
SETTING THE RECORD STRAIGHT!!! from Senator Gerard "Luz" James II

JAMES TO SUPPORT WINDSTORM INSURANCE; URGES PUBLIC TO VOTE ON STATUS

When the windstorm insurance bill comes before the full Legislature during the next session, I intend to support it. While I believe that there are drawbacks and it may not be a perfect solution, I believe it will help those who have been denied the opportunity of owning their own home.

Many constituents have called my office seeking relief, for while interest rates on mortgages are low and they have the down payment to buy a home, they cannot obtain insurance. Banks will not approve mortgages for properties that are not covered by insurance. We as legislators cannot allow this roadblock to stand in the way of home ownership for the people of the Virgin Islands. The realtors, insurance companies, and banks have expressed support for the bill because it will open up the housing market.

Although I understand that some people will not be able to afford insurance under this bill, it will provide relief for those who can afford it. I believe it is important to take a stand and support this legislation.

JAMES WORKERS TO ASSIST IN PUBLIC EDUCATION ON STATUS

I will commit the resources of my staff and campaign workers from the general elections to the upcoming public education campaign on status. It is necessary that we as political leaders take the initiative and get involved to make sure that voters understand the issues and choices that are before us.

The vote on political status may be the most significant political decision that this generation of Virgin Islanders will make. It is important for political leaders to set the example so that voters will participate in the process. I challenge my colleagues to do likewise. During the last general elections, we all had legions of workers knocking on doors, disseminating information about our personal agendas. I believe we should give the same effort to ensure that the word about status gets out.

The Children's Hour

Nothing to do this summer? Try reading

By JEANNE FRASER BROOKS
Avis Staff Writer

With school over for the year plaintive cries of, "There's nothing to do; I'm bored" will soon be heard from Cramer Park to Ham's Bluff.

In reality, there's lots for kids on St. Croix to do. One of the most basic escapes from boredom is reading.

Throughout the summer "The Children's Hour" will offer synopses of books for children ages 5-12.

The two presented here today are available at Marcia's Bookstore in Sunny Isle.

"Violet and the Pirates" written by Marcia Leonard with illustrations by John Wallner is one in a series of What Belongs? books published by Silver Press.

Violet is a dressmaker cat who wants more than anything else to be a sailor.

She stows away on a pirate ship captained by an alligator.

Through a series of questions the reader is taken on board Violet's adventure.

This is an excellent book for the younger reader who still needs the help of illustrations to decipher words.

Or for an older child to read to a pre-schooler so they can both have fun.

"What's in the Deep?" by Alese and Morton Pechter, a Reading Rainbow Book published by Acropolis Books Ltd., will hold the attention of very young readers with its brilliantly colored photographs, and of the older child with snippets of information on the sea life pictured.

The Pechter's grandchildren are featured in the prose asking the questions and making the comments children everywhere

Your child by Denise Bennerson Ph D.

Child development from birth to five

A person who is comfortable and knowledgeable about the growth and development of children usually feels competent working with young children.

Most people such as doctors, teachers, day care providers, and psychologists who work with children understand how children develop and the factors that contribute to their development.

Parents should also be aware of their child's development to help him or her grow and mature to their fullest potential.

This article will discuss some of the developmental milestones of a child from birth to five. It will help parents and others to become more aware of what they should expect of a child as he or she develops.

A child develops basically in five areas: a) Moter Skills - Gross/Fine Motor, b) Communication Skills - Expressive/Receptive c) Cognitive, d) Self-Help and e) Social and Emotional Skills.

Motor skills are divided into two areas: fine motor and gross motor. Fine motor skills involve actions that use the small muscles of the body such as the hands and fingers.

Gross motor skills involve actions that use large muscles of the body such as those of the arms and legs.

Communication skills are divided into two areas: expressive and receptive skills.

Language is the major method of communication. Expressive skills are what the child says and receptive skills are what the child understands.

Cognitive skills or intellectual development are the child's ability to gather and use information, or to learn.

Self-help are skills for basic living such as feeding, toileting, and dressing.

Social and emotional skills are the orderly growth of a child's sense of self and interactions with other people in the environment.

The development of a child is similar for all children.

However, some children may develop at different rates.

We can observe if a child is developing normally by looking at the five areas of development and the skills of a child at a certain age.

The following ages and developmental milestones will help parents to observe the progress of their children.

By 12 months a child should:
-walk and drink with assistance
-drop and pick up their toys
-attempt to imitate sounds
-respond to NO
-hold out arms and legs while being dressed

By 24 months a child should:
-walk alone
-scribble
-have a vocabulary of 50 words
-explore to learn
-imitate adult behavior in play

By 36 months a child should:
-run well and kick a ball
-snip with scissors
-understand no, not, can't, and don't
-make negative statements
-use a spoon while still spilling a little

By 48 months a child should:
-copy a circle, imitate writing a plus sign
-carry out a series of two to four related directions
-speech is understandable to strangers, but there are still some sound errors
-use the toilet independently
-share toys with others

By 60 months a child should:
-print a few capital letters
-talk about causality and the content of a story
-lace shoes
-show interest in exploring sex differences
-draw a person with two to six recognizable body parts

Some children mature faster than others, while other children are slow to develop.

Parents who observe that their child is not developing normally according to their age may have a child who is developmentally delayed, and they should seek a second opinion.

Demand certification of St. Croix Hospital

Call, write governor elected officials

All the people in St. Croix and their elected representatives, should have, as one of their highest priorities, the certification of the St. Croix Hospital. This certification is necessary so insurance companies, Medicare and Medicaid recognize and accept claims.

The most recent disturbing reports show favoritism and discriminatory treatment in favor of St. Thomas Hospital needs while giving pious lip service and press releases giving the impression of helping the St. Croix Hospital. Everyone in each of the Virgin Islands should be ashamed that the only Hospital in the largest island has not been certified for years.

The St. Thomas Hospital is also not accredited, but the Commissioners and the Executive Branch wined, dined and lobbied the mainland team so the needed certification was obtained for St. Thomas Hospital.

I chaired a meeting last Saturday of ST. CROIX NOW and about 50 representative residents of all colors and origins attended. Our main speakers were Mr. George McCoy, the Chief Executive Officer of the St. Croix Hospital, and Mr. Derrick Steinmann, the chairman of the Hospital Board, which is supposed to run the hospital.I repeat events from a reporter's notes of this meeting.

Crucians have to "demand" better health care from their government run hospital, according to hospital board chairman, Derrick Steinmann.

Steinmann and the hospital's chief Executive Office, George McCoy, told community group, ST. CROIX NOW Saturday that residents must pressure Senators and Governor Farrelly to give the hospital the money it needs to provide quality care.

"The only way to get results is to grab the attention of our elected officials. We have to send them letters and faxes and make phone calls. Crucians haven't done enough to demand that the situation at their hospital improve" Steinmann said.

The hospital's board, and administration, are fighting for management of the day to day business of the hospital now controlled by the government.

"We must disentangle ourselves from the government" Steinmann said.

"We can't hire a nurse without the governor signing the papers;- If we need supplies, we have to go to Property and Procurement;-for budget matters, we have to go to the Office of Management and Budget. This is an intolerable situation," Steinmann said.

Senate Health Committee chairwoman, Lorraine Berry, is "looking at legislation" that, if passed, would give the hospital the autonomy it seeks, according to Steinmann.

"But Governor Farrelly will veto the bill unless he gets a lot of letters from the Crucian community," Steinmann said.

McCoy said the Hospital is making progress on its other main goal, recertification.

Federal recertification officials might be "invited" to evaluate the hospital in November, according to McCoy.

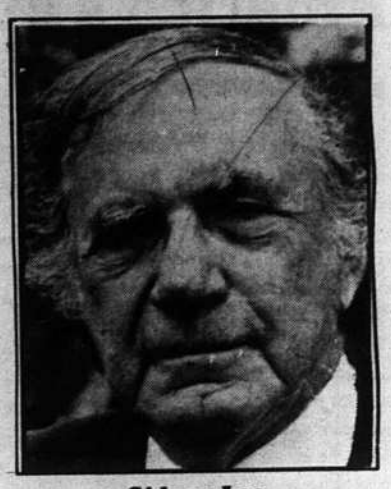

"But we have to document for the federal government all the changes we've made in the hospital, he said.

The hospital's uncertified status costs the facility "$3 - $5 million a year in federal Medicaid and Medicare funds," according to McCoy.

Meanwhile, we learn that the executive branch has balked at signing the contract with the national Health and Hospital group - a contract designed to guide the St. Croix Hospital in its efforts for recertification. A survey has been made for the hospital and items listed to be corrected in individual depart-

America's attitude on gays: Mix of tolerance and intolerance

By JILL LAWRENCE

WASHINGTON (AP) - In the vast middle, between voices insisting on gay rights now and gay rights never, are millions of people who remind Paulette Goodman and Shirley Eichberg of how they once felt.

They didn't know anybody gay. Physical affection between two men or two women made them uncomfortable. They wondered what type of people were gay, what kinds of lives they led.

Then, each learned one of her children was gay, and everything changed.

As homosexuals fight harder and more visibly for legal rights and social acceptance, heterosexual Americans are being forced to confront their tangled feelings on the subject. Parents of lesbian and gay children are pioneers in the field.

"Let's not tell anybody yet," Eichberg advised her son Rob when he told her more than 20 years ago that he was gay. "What will it do to his future?" she worried. "How will people react?"

"Most of us are ignorant. All we know is what we hear and most of it is negative," said Goodman, who discovered her child was gay in 1980. "We really wonder what kind of a subculture our children are getting into."

Both women - one in Los Angeles, one in Washington - went on to counsel families coping with a child's homosexuality. They long ago adjusted to their own situations and say even same-sex displays of affection seem unremarkable now.

LIFESTYLE

"You do come to terms with it," said Goodman, a former president of Parents and Friends of Lesbians and Gays. "It's a matter of becoming desensitized. The more you see and meet gay people, the less apprehensive you are and the more comfortable you are."

American attitudes are a complex mix of tolerance and intolerance.

Eight out of 10 people in two separate polls this year said they generally oppose job discrimination against gays. Roughly the same percentage say they wouldn't object to a gay airline pilot or accountant.

But people are evenly split on whether the ban on gays in the military should be lifted, as President Clinton has proposed, and on whether they'd object to having a gay doctor.

And well over half in a CBS-New York Times poll this year said they would object to their child having a gay elementary school teacher and would not permit their child to watch a TV show with gay characters in it, play at a home with a homosexual parent or read a story about a homosexual couple.

A poll released Saturday by U.S. News and World Report found 53 percent of respondents said they personally know someone who is gay. As recently as 1985, pollsters routinely found only 25 percent to 30 percent knew someone gay.

Public displays of affection also evoke strong feelings. At the extreme, the National Gay and Lesbian Task Force reports that last year two lesbians were shot and killed in their suburban front yard by a neighbor upset about their open displays of affection.

A peck on the cheek figured in the unsuccessful bid by conservatives and religious-right activists to sink the nomination of assistant housing secretary Roberta Achtenberg. They gave each senator a tape of Achtenberg bussing her longtime female partner during a gay pride parade, as their young son sat between them.

Religious people are among the least receptive toward gay aspirations, according to Gregory Herek, a psychologist at the University of California-Davis. Among the most receptive are people who personally know gay individuals.

That's why Rob Eichberg founded National Coming Out Day, observed annually on Oct. 11.

"Most people think they don't know anyone gay or lesbian, and in fact everybody does," said Eichberg, a Santa Fe psychologist and author. "It is imperative that we come out and let people know who we are and disabuse them of their fears and stereotypes."

That's one reason gay people are disturbed by the "don't ask, don't tell" compromise emerging as the new military policy toward homosexuals. It perpetuates the stigma, they say, and forces gays to live dishonestly. Plus, it does nothing to dispel stereotypes and foster tolerance.

The military, and the larger society, eventually learned to accommodate and accept blacks and women. Gays say that if they're allowed to participate fully in society without hiding who they are, the same evolution will occur.

Herek, who has studied heterosexual attitudes toward homosexuals for 15 years, said he expects the changes to be slow and gradual.

Most lesbians and gay men grew up hearing that it was "bad, disgusting and evil to be gay," he said.

"They usually go through a period in which they're learning to be comfortable about themselves and about two people of the same gender embracing and kissing and making love."

Law shot down: BOZEMAN, Mont. (AP) - A judge struck down a state law agaynst harassing hunters, saying the law infringes on free speech rights.

District Judge Thomas Olson issued the ruling in the case of an animal rights advocate who was charged after attempting to disrupt a bison hunt in 1990.

The 1987 harassment law makes it a misdemeanor to "disturb an individual engaged in the lawful taking of an animal with the intent to dissuade the individual or otherwise prevent the taking of the animal."

Olson wrote that the law "prohibits communication with hunters which is intended to dissuade them from hunting, while allowing communication with hunters which encourages hunting."

He ruled Thursday that the state couldn't protect one viewpoint over the other.

According to court documents, animal rights activist John Lilburn stepped in front of a hunter's rifle and said, "Don't shoot" as the hunter was taking aim at a bison.

Gay bashers: BALTIMORE (AP) - A jury convicted three men of assault in what prosecutors described as a gay bashing incident outside a bar.

The conviction Friday stems from a March 1992 brawl outside a night club frequented by homosexuals.

According to witnesses, the three men taunted bar patrons, provoking a fight in which several people were injured.

"The problem is they went there that night to taunt the people," prosecutor Carolyn Starks Saxon said during closing arguments Thursday.

Attorney Donald Daneman, representing the three men, said his clients didn't start the fight.

The three were trying to defend themselves after a bar patron touched off the brawl by grabbing the buttocks of one of them, Daneman said.

Anthony Ambrosino Jr., 22, was convicted of two counts of assault with intent to murder. James Randolph, 24, and his 22-year-old brother, Matthew Randolph, were found guilty of assault.

Tracing the Jewish-Black ties in jazz

By MITCHELL LANDSBERG

NEW YORK (AP) - It is one of the odd little footnotes to jazz history that Louis Armstrong, the greatest of all black-American musicians, wore a Star of David around his neck for much of his life.

Not that Armstrong was Jewish. He wore the star, biographer Gary Giddins says, in homage to a Jewish influence that dated to his childhood and, quite likely, found expression in his music.

Lest anyone think this all sounds a little meshuga (Yiddish for crazy), Giddins offered some persuasive evidence Thursday night at a concert called "The Jazz Connection: The Jewish and African-American Relationship."

The concert at Avery Fisher Hall, part of New York's weeklong JVC Jazz Festival, began with contrasting performances by a Jewish cantor and a black gospel singer. The idea, pretty obviously, was to highlight the similarities in their melodic styles, each infused with a mournfulness born of centuries of exile and suffering.

The audience then was treated to what may have been the evening's highlight: a short snippet of a tape-recorded interview with Armstrong in which he recalls a Jewish family that befriended him during his childhood in New Orleans.

He remembered that the parents used to sing a Yiddish lullaby. And then, in that wonderful, soulful, gravel-in-a-bullfrog voice, Armstrong sang a few bars. Jews have played an influential role in jazz - second only to that of black Americans, said Giddins, who helped organize the JVC concert.

The Village Voice jazz critic is the author most recently of "Faces in the Crowd," a collection of essays about jazz.

True, they are second by a mile, and the list of Jewish jazz musicians who are household names is pretty short.

It might include Benny Goodman, Stan Getz, Artie Shaw and Harry James.

But beyond that, there's a long roll of fine jazz musicians who are Jewish.

Informant details alleged bombers activities in U.S.

By LARRY McSHANE

A TALE OF TERRORISM

NEW YORK (AP) - Forget John Grisham. Forget Robert Ludlum. The week's most riveting tale of terrorism and espionage was written by FBI agent John Liguori, who detailed a plot that seemed more fiction that fact.

A car bomb at the United Nations. Another in the Lincoln Tunnel under the Hudson River. Gunmen blasting their way into the FBI's New York headquarters, then detonating a third bomb. The assassination of a U.S. senator, just one of several names on a terrorist hit list.

But it was all true, the FBI said. Most of it was in an eight-page criminal complaint in which Liguori told the story of an informant who infiltrated a group of Muslim fundamentalists and quickly became the ringleader's right-hand man.

The informant was identified in several news reports as Emad Salem, a 43-year-old former officer in the Egyptian army who occasionally acted as interpreter and bodyguard to Sheik Omar Abdel-Rahman, a Muslim cleric linked to the bomb suspects.

The informant provided a blow by blow account of the alleged terrorists' activities, from their initial meeting in May until a SWAT team burst into a Queens bomb factory Thursday and arrested five suspects mixing a witches' brew of explosives.

The story, as laid out in the complaint and by federal officials:

A May 7 meeting provided the first whiff of terrorism. The informant met with alleged mastermind Siddig Ibrahim Siddig Ali in Jersey City, N.J. They discussed driving a car bomb into a United Nations parking garage - the same technique used in the bombing of the World Trade Center on Feb. 26.

Eleven days passed before Siddig expanded the plan: the Jacob K. Javits Federal Office Building, the Manhattan home of the FBI, was now a target. Siddig gave the informant $300 and told him to rent a garage in Queens to serve as a bomb factory. The same day, Siddig confided that his friend Clement Rodney Hampton-El was a good source for explosives.

Siddig and Hampton-El bragged to the informant about their roles in a test run of the bomb used on the Trade Center. Siddig also boasted of U.N. connections that would allow him access to plant a car bomb there.

The garage at the rear of a Queens storefront became a safe house and central meeting place for conspirators over the next month. They schemed and stirred up explosives there, unaware the building was bugged and under surveillance by the FBI.

A May 23 meeting indicated Siddig's commitment to his plan. The suspect proposed killing security guards to get inside the federal building and plant a bomb. He mentioned doing surveillance of the building, adding he had sketches of its outside entrances.

On May 27, Siddig, suspect Fares Khallafalla, a man using the alias Abdou Zaid and the informant tested a timing device for detonating a bomb at the safe house.

Here, the informant said, Siddig proposed his ultimate plan: "Three bombs should be detonated in three different locations at different times on the same day." The United Nations would be first, followed by the Lincoln Tunnel and then the federal building.

Two days later, Siddig and the informant drove from Jersey City to Manhattan through a Hudson River tunnel. Siddig, glancing around, offered opinions on the best place to plant explosives in the tunnel. In Manhattan, they drove past the United Nations and had a similar conversation.

On June 4, the informant first met Mohammed Saleh, a Yonkers gasoline station owner. Saleh agreed to provide the fuel needed to mix with fertilizer in creating the crude but powerful bombs necessary for the attacks.

More than two weeks later the bomb mixing began. On June 19, five suspects discussed blowing up the U.N., the federal building and the Holland and Lincoln tunnels under the Hudson as they created their first batch of deadly brew.

Last Sunday, Siddig and the informant drove to a remote area of Connecticut and detonated a test bomb. When they returned to New York, the informant and a suspect known only as Mohammad traveled to New Jersey. Their goal: getting the guns needed to blast their way into the buildings they planned to bomb.

The last shipment of fuel from Saleh's gas station arrived Wednesday night - just hours before federal authorities arrested five men in the middle of creating a new batch of explosive in a 55-gallon drum.

Sudan a breeding ground for Islamic militancy

By RUTH SINAI

WASHINGTON (AP) - On a sweltering day in July 1990, a blind, barefoot Muslim cleric entered the U.S. Embassy in Khartoum, capital of Sudan, and got a permit to visit the United States.

Among the followers Sheik Omar Abdel-Rahman has since attracted in this country are five Sudanese arrested in a thwarted plot to unleash massive bombings on New York City.

Sudan, like Iran, is formally ruled according to Islamic law and is a busy breeding ground for the spread of Islamic militancy.

Although Sudan's government has not carried out any terrorist attacks itself, the United States has several times in recent months considered placing it on a list of countries supporting terrorism.

It's a case of guilt by association, say U.S. officials, who note that Sudan is hosting a growing number of Iranian-sponsored terrorist groups.

"The United States is very disturbed by the close relationship that Sudan has developed with Iran," said State Department spokesman Mike McCurry on Friday. "We know that Iran is a leading sponsor of international terrorism."

The relationship with Tehran began to burgeon soon after Iraq lost the Persian Gulf War and was no longer able to help its ally, Sudan.

Sudan's military government, which had overthrown civilian rulers in a 1989 coup, quickly turned to Iran where it found an eager benefactor.

Soon after, Iranian President Hashemi Rafsanjani visited Khartoum and Sudan's government announced the imposition of Islamic law. Women were to don veils and courts were to practice according to the Koran, Islam's holy book.

"The present military government ... has pursued religiously extremist policies," says the U.S. State Department's 1992 human rights report, which documents an aggressive drive to impose Islamic laws on Sudan's 25 million people.

This drive, and increasing evidence of severe human rights violations, further strained U.S.-Sudanese relations, resulting in a cutoff of all U.S. military aid and in the government's Nov. 3, 1992, ban of all U.S. commercial weapons exports to Sudan.

Meanwhile, Iran was providing millions of dollars to build Islamic centers, and has sent several hundred elite military troops to train an ideologically motivated, Muslim paramilitary force called the Popular Defense Force.

The Iranian Revolutionary Guards also began using Sudan as a base to train Muslim cadres from Tunisia, Egypt and Algeria so they can overthrow their secular governments and install Islamic rule, say U.S. and Israeli officials.

Sudan knocks terrorism

CAIRO, Egypt (AP) - Sudan's foreign minister challenged the United States on Saturday to prove its allegations that his country is linked to a terrorist network that planned explosions and assassinations in New York.

Five Sudanese were among eight alleged Muslim extremists arrested this week in New York in a reported plot to blow up the United Nations building and other targets. There also are reports that two diplomats with Sudan's mission to the United Nations are under investigation.

"Sudan denounces all kinds of terrorism," said Foreign Minister Hussein Abu-Saleh, in Cairo to attend a meeting of the Organization of African Unity.

"I have seen published pictures of these terrorists in the newspapers, and their features are not Sudanese. The United States has to prove that this plot is by the Sudanese government and people. Sudan's religion is Islam, which is very far from terrorism."

Abu-Saleh's comments were distributed by the Egyptian government's Middle East News Agency.

The Sudanese minister also said Khartoum had "no clear information" about the identities of the arrested Sudanese, who have permanent resident status in the United States.

No more teachers or books, but plenty of parents' dirty looks

Family values: Summer child care

By VIVIAN MARINO

NEW YORK (AP) - For millions of youngsters, the end of the school year means more time for baseball, swimming, mall hopping or lazin' around the neighborhood. No tests. No homework. Few cares.

But for their working parents, it may mean more expensive, haphazard child-care arrangements, a few missed days on the job and a dropoff in productivity as they fret about where the kids are during what used to be school hours.

"Each year, parents scramble when it's time to make summer arrangements," said Denise Nelson, community coordinator for the Washington-based National Association of Child Care Resource & Referral Agencies.

"They feel frustrated by a lack of options ... and the cost of care when a child leaves school. They may have only been paying for 10 to 20 hours a week and now they're paying for 40-plus hours."

The economic impact can be significant for many of the nation's 13.7 million dual-income households with children. Child-care expenses already eat an average 10 percent of annual income - right behind food, taxes and housing. The cost is considerably more for those earning under $15,000 a year - about 25 percent - though far less for those making more than $50,000 - about 6 percent.

While circumstances vary, the most recent Census Bureau study, conducted in 1986, found that parents of school-age children spent roughly 22 percent more for child care in the summer months compared with the rest of the year.

To help offset costs, the federal government offers, among other things, tax-reducing dependent care credits of as much as $720 per child and $1,440 for two or more children under age 13. Some employers also offer dependent care assistance accounts that let you use up to $5,000 pretax to pay for child care.

But not all families exploit the tax break since they must provide their caregiver's Social Security number or taxpayer identificiaton number. Many caregivers want to be paid "off the books," in cash, so they can avoid taxes.

"I think we need to talk about a new system of incentives to bring parents to the above-ground child-care system," Nelson said. "We need to develop ... a value for quality child care."

"Quality child care is expensive," said Barbara Reisman, executive director of Child Care Action Campaign, based in New York. "But we'll pay an even higher price for the cost of neglect. Our future work force will be less competitive with other countries."

With an eye to the future, more companies have been reaching out to employees by providing family-friendly benefits.

About three-quarters of 1,026 large companies recently surveyed by Hewitt Associates, a benefits consulting firm in Lincolnshire, Ill., said they provided some form of dependent-care benefits to employees, ranging from referral services to child-care centers at the workplace.

"It's a standard thing with large companies. (But) it's still a small percentage of employers who have responded," said Dana Friedman, co-president of the Families and Work Institute, a non-profit research group in New York.

The scramble by working parents with school-age kids to get through the summer is contagious. Even parents with preschool toddlers worry about it.

Steve and Kathy Gaertner of Minneapolis, for example, say they've begun to investigate likely summer arrangements even though their eldest daughter Kelly is only 4.

"It just seems like it's going to be a step backwards from the environment they're in now," at the day-care center, said Gaertner, 36, a partner in the Minneapolis marketing firm Added Value Inc. "I know we'll plan accordingly but, at this point, we don't have a solution."

Child-care advocacy groups, meanwhile, give high marks to efforts from companies like Fel-Pro Inc., a maker of auto and industrial gaskets.

Every morning during the summer, Fel-Pro buses employees' school-age children to a 220-acre retreat 45 minutes from the company's Skokie, Ill., headquarters. The children spend the day swimming, hiking, playing baseball, doing crafts or learning to cook.

The bus returns them to corporate headquarters by 4 p.m., where they're met by babysitters who watch the children until parents are finished working. The cost: $25 a week per child, with a maximum weekly cost of $75.

Richard Morris, Fel-Pro's director of communications, says about 200 of the company's 1,800 employees enroll their children in camp. The program, along with other family-friendly benefits, has helped significantly increase worker productivity and reduce absenteeism, he said. Fel-Pro's employee turnover rate is 7 percent, vs. 9 percent for the national average.

The U.S. Virgin Islands Girl Scout Council is participating in the Summer Food Service Program. Meals will be provided to all children without charge. Acceptance and participation requirements for the program and all activities are the same for all regardless of race, color, national origin, sex, age or handicap, and there will be no discrimination in the course of the meal service. Nixon weeps as wife, Pat, is remembered for grace and strength

By JEFF WILSON

YORBA LINDA, Calif. (AP) - Former first lady Pat Nixon was remembered Saturday as a woman of dignity and quiet courage in a life of pain and power.

"Few women in public life have suffered as she has suffered and done it with such grace," said the Rev. Billy Graham.

At the morning service, an ashen Nixon walked into the garden with Graham.

The former president was stricken with emotion as he saw the mourners, putting his hand over his mouth and crying.

Marines carried the casket to the flower-bedecked bier.

Graham stood at the podium and began to speak as the sun poked through overcast skies for the first time.

About 250 mourners gathered at the Nixon presidential library for the service, which was attended by two other former presidents - Gerald Ford and Ronald Reagan - and several members of Congress, including Sens. Bob Dole, John Chafee, Orrin Hatch and Mark Hatfield.

Many mourners were synonymous with the tumultuous years of the Nixon White House - Henry Kissinger, Alexander Haig, C.G. "Bebe" Rebozo, H.R. Haldeman, Charles Colson and former ambassador Walter Annenberg. Nixon resigned Aug. 9, 1974, amid the Watergate scandal.

Graham and other speakers remembered Mrs. Nixon for her inspiration.

"To know Pat Nixon is to know a woman of compassion, courage and character," said Cynthia Hardin Milligan, a member of the library board and a family friend.

Ms. Milligan noted the Secret Service code name for Mrs. Nixon was "Starlight."

"It was especially appropriate," she said. "She was fun to be with. She had a great sense of adventure."

Former Sen. George McGovern, who was defeated by Nixon in a bitter 1972 presidential campaign, said he admired Mrs. Nixon.

"I wanted to be here," said McGovern. "I've always admired Mrs. Nixon. She is one of the least pretentious public figures I've ever known. She had a lot of courage."

California Gov. Pete Wilson and Senate Minority Leader Dole of Kansas also delivered eulogies.

"As first lady, Pat Nixon was a patron of American culture who never patronized her countrymen," said Dole. "She loved the White House, not for its power but for its beauty and its history."

Mrs. Nixon, 81, who died Tuesday of lung cancer at her New Jersey home, was interred in the garden of the library, 35 miles southeast of Los Angeles.

The former president escorted his wife's body back to California Friday.

The trip was made on the old Air Force One, a Boeing 707 that President Clinton provided for the occasion, the same plane Nixon flew on his historic trips to China and the former Soviet Union.

Aviation disasters: Stunt plane crashes during air show

CONCORD, N.H. (AP) - A stunt plane participating in an air show crashed and exploded Saturday while several thousand spectators looked on.

Two people - a father-daughter wing walking act - were aboard the plane that crashed at Concord Airport, witnesses said.

Authorities would not say if the two were killed. Ambulances and fire trucks were on the runway.

Witnesses said the plane came out of a roll at about 100 feet when something went wrong and the plane went into another roll and crashed.

Air show announcer Frank Kingston Smith said the father, Ron Shelly of Midland, Va., was piloting the plane from a rear cockpit while Karen Shelly was in a front cockpit waiting to get onto the wing.

Several thousand spectators saw the crash, but nobody in the crowd was hurt. The crash occurred several hundred yards from the crowd.

... and in India crash kills four

NEW DELHI, India (AP) - An Indian air force fighter plane crashed during a military exercise Saturday, killing the pilot and three soldiers when it plowed into a crowd on the ground. At least seven people were injured.

The Russian-designed MiG-21 aircraft went down during the joint exercise by the army and the air force near Gwalior, 200 miles south of New Delhi, the United News of India news agency said.

The aircraft, which had taken off from the air force base in Gwalior, failed to pull out of a nose dive, the agency said.

U.S. missiles hit Baghdad in retaliation for plot

By SUSANNE M. SCHAFER
AP Military Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - U.S. forces launched Tomahawk missiles against Iraqi intelligence headquarters in Baghdad based on "compelling evidence" of a plot to assassinate former President Bush, President Clinton said Saturday night.

Clinton, speaking to the nation in a hastily arranged address from the Oval Office, said the planned attack against Bush was "directed and pursued" by Iraqi intelligence.

"We thank God it was unsuccessful," he said.

"A firm and commensurate response was essential to protect our sovereignty," he said.

He called the plot against Bush "particularly loathsome and cowardly" because it was against the leader of the Gulf War coalition.

Clinton said a U.S. investigation convinced him "there is compelling evidence that there was in fact a plot to assassinate former President Bush and that this plot, which included the use of a powerful bomb made in Iraq, was directed and pursued by the Iraqi intelligence service."

Clinton said he gave the order Friday to attack "the Iraqi intelligence service's principal command control facility in Baghdad."

He said the missiles were launched at 4:22 p.m. EDT.

Joint Chiefs of Staff Chairman Colin Powell said 23 cruise missiles were launched from the USS Peterson and USS Chancellorsville in the Red Sea and the Persian Gulf, respectively. The missiles struck Baghdad early Sunday morning.

Powell said an early assessment indicated that "all 23 performed as they were supposed to" and that they "landed in the target area where they are supposed to be."

Striking the tough tone of a commander in chief, Clinton said the bombing was intended "to deter further violence against our people and to affirm the expectation of civilized behavior among nations."

"From the first days of our revolution, American security has depended on the clarity of this message: Don't tread on us," Clinton said.

Clinton said he had discussed the action with congressional leaders and U.S. allies and called for an emergency meeting of the U.N. Security Council "to expose Iraq's crime."

Clinton called Bush just minutes after the attack was launched, and Secretary of State Warren Christopher briefed Bush in Maine on the evidence earlier Saturday, a senior administration official said.

Reached at his Kennebunkport, Maine, home by The Associated Press, Bush declined comment.

"I'm not in the interview business, but thank you very much for calling," Bush said as music played loudly in the background. He then hung up.

The official said the attack could have been launched Friday night but was delayed a day out of respect for the Muslim holy day.

Clinton's action drew immediate bipartisan support.

"I think it was decisive," said Sen. David Pryor, D-Ark. "I think it showed leadership and he took action and sent a message to these terrorists that the United States would not tolerate these actions."

Sen. Bob Dole, R-Kansas, called Clinton from Charleston, W.Va., and offered the president his support.

Colorado Republican Sen. Hank Brown said "the circumstances more than justified the attack. The president did the right thing."

The president said he made the decision to attack after receiving a report from Attorney General Janet Reno and CIA Director James Woolsey confirming there was an Iraqi-sponsored plot to kill Bush.

"Saddam Hussein has demonstrated repeatedly that he will resort to terrorism or aggression if left unchecked," Clinton said, adding that every effort was made "to minimize the loss of innocent life."

Bush visited Kuwait in April, where he was honored for his role leading the allies in the Persian Gulf War. Kuwaiti officials arrested 17 people in a suspected plot against Bush; 11 of the suspects are Iraqis.

When the plot was revealed last month, some congressional leaders said the United States should retaliate if it was proved that Saddam Hussein's government was behind the alleged plot. Some urged the use of military force.

Iraq dismissed charges that it was involved in the plot and accused Kuwait and the United States of laying the groundwork for a military strike.

"The evidence is very conclusive that it was the work of the Iraqi intelligence service and was an act that would have had to be approved by the highest level of Iraqi government," Aspin said.

But he noted that Saturday's strike was not directed specifically against Saddam Hussein. agents went to Kuwait to investigate.

The attack was launched under a U.N. article that allows nations to defend themselves, but administration officials said they hoped it would have a "spinoff effect" in encouraging the Iraqis to abide by separate U.N. resolutions adopted in the wake of the Gulf War.

President Reagan invoked the same provision when the U.S. bombed Libya in 1986 in retaliation for the bombing of a German discotheque frequented by American servicemen.

Nigerian dictator calls new elections, bars previous candidates

By MICHELLE FAUL

ABUJA, Nigeria (AP) - Nigeria's military ruler on Saturday announced new presidential elections to replace the June 12 balloting he annulled and barred the two candidates who ran earlier from running again.

Gen. Ibrahim Babangida made the startling announcement in his first nationwide televised address since he abruptly voided the election, which was contested by two wealthy friends whose parties he created.

He gave no date for the elections.

He said two new candidates would be picked from the two existing political parties by the end of July and a civilian government would be in place on Aug. 27 as he previously had promised.

Babangida, harshly criticized by the West for canceling the elections, took power in a coup in 1985 and has repeatedly broken his promises to return the country to civilian rule.

"History would bear witness that as an administration we have always striven, in all our policy decisions, to build the foundation of lasting democracy ... not a temporay show of excitement and manipulation by an over-articulate section of the elite and its captive audience," he said.

The announcement is a blow to billionaire publisher and shipping mogul Moshood K.O. Abiola, who was leading banker Bashir Othman Tofa in the presidential balloting when a federal court ordered the results suppressed because of complaints by Babangida supporters that the vote was rigged.

Babangida then annulled the election, citing a flurry of contradictory court rulings on whether the balloting was valid. He has been accused of manipulating the controversy to remain in power, and few of his promises are believed.

Abiola is disqualified by a new requirement by Babangida that a candidate must have belonged to a party for a year. Tofa, 46, is banned by a new rule requiring candidates to be at least 50 years old.

Babangida said his ruling military council has evidence the two candidates spent more than $60 million buying votes.

"Use of money was again the major source of undermining the electoral process," Babangida said, recalling he had annulled two primaries last year for the same reason.

Nigeria's succession of authoritarian rulers have used corruption as an excuse for coups in a nation where government graft is institutionalized.

Babangida is the latest in a series of military dictators who have ruled Nigeria for 23 of its 33 years of independence from Britain, and for the past 10 years.

Rights group: release secessionist leader

ABUJA, Nigeria (AP) - A human rights group demanded the release of a secessionist leader on Saturday after thousands of protesters rioted, setting a chief's house ablaze and ransacking a police station.

Local leaders also set Saturday as a day of fasting and prayers for peace and the release of Ken Saro-Wiwa, a radical author and spokesman for the southern Movement for the Survival of the Ogoni People.

The Ogoni are a southern ethnic group and make up one of the largest of Nigeria's 250 tribes. Saro-Wiwa's group is demanding reparations and secession, charging that northerners who dominate Nigerian politics have enriched themselves from the south's oil wealth while destroying the southern environment.

Traditional rivalries between the predominantly Muslim north and mainly Christian south have been exacerbated by the government's annulment of June 12 presidential elections that were to have ended a decade of military rule.

Many southerners believe the vote was nullifed because unofficial results gave the victory to Moshood K.O.

Abiola, a billionaire publisher would have become Nigeria's first elected southern president. The military dictator, Gen. Ibrahim Babangida, was to make a televised speech late Saturday.

He had been dropping hints for several days that he has come up with an alternative democracy plan, and was expected to unveil that plan in his speech.

Trial starts in Cairo for 29 extremists accused of murder

CAIRO, Egypt (AP) - Twenty-nine Muslim extremists accused of murder and plotting to overthrow the government confronted judges Saturday with chants of defiance and tales of torture.

"We are fighters! We love our guns!" the men shouted from inside black-barred cages as they awaited the arrival of three military officers who will decide whether most of them live or die. "We have a cause: To bring down the secular leader."

As the judges entered the room, the clamor turned to religious slogans.

Shortly after the trial started, the government's Middle East News Agency reported the arrest of nine armed men suspected of plotting terrorist attacks. The report did not elaborate.

But Muslim militants have escalated violence since early last year in their campaign to establish an Islamic state. More than 170 people have died, mainly police and extremists.

Principal targets of the militants used to be police, Coptic Christians and foreign tourists. But since February, they have been exploding nail-packed bombs in crowded areas, apparently adding the average Egyptian to their target list.

The trial that began Saturday is the sixth for Muslim radicals before military courts since President Hosni Mubarak turned to the army's judicial system in October for speedy trials. So far, 22 defendants have received death sentences. Two have been executed.

The defendants in the latest case are charged with murdering at least two policemen and two civilians and robbing five Christian-owned jewelry shops to finance a terrorist campaign against the state. They also are accused of forming an illegal organization whose goal is the violent overthrow of the government. Both murder and the formation of an illegal group are punishable by death.

Defendants professed innocence of the robbery and murder charges, and many accused police of torture.

"These are all lies and untrue accusations," said Ramadan Mustafa Hassan, 28. "This whole case is a lie."

Hassan, bearded like most of the others and wearing the white robe favored by Islamic fundamentalists, is alleged to be the group's leader. He showed his bare, scarred left ankle as a colleague, Sayed Khaled Mahmoud, described tortures he said were inflicted on defendants by investigators seeking information.

"We were naked, and they held us upside down," Mahmoud said. "Then they brought our wives and threatened them to force us to confess things we did not do."

The government denies its police routinely use torture, as several human rights groups charge, but acknowledges individual cases.

Rights activists have criticized Mubarak's decision to refer radicals to military courts, which allow no appeals. Once convicted and sentenced, defendants can only petition Mubarak for clemency. Saturday's 90-minute session was mainly procedural.

Somalis shell U.S. tanker

MOGADISHU, Somalia (AP) - Somali gunmen fired four rocket-propelled grenades at an American fuel tanker in the first attack on foreign ships at Mogadishu's port in several months, military officials said Saturday.

Damage was minimal and there were no casualties, but the attack underscored the volatile situation in the city nine days after the United Nations launched a manhunt for warlord Mohamed Farrah Aidid.

Leaflets purported to be from Muslim fundamentalists were handed out in the city Saturday claiming Americans would be killed if U.N. forces captured Aidid and tried him for ambushes June 5 that killed 24 Pakistani peacekeepers.

There was no indication Saturday's attack was linked to the threat, which was signed by a group called Voice of Muslim Brotherhood that claimed 1,500 members. Local Somalis said the statement came from Aidid supporters using the name as a front.

The western town of Luc is known as a fundamentalist stronghold, but there has not been a strong Islamic backlash against foreign troops in Mogadishu.

The port attack occurred Friday evening as the SS American Osprey was unloading jet fuel. One shell punched a hole in a cargo hold, sending a 4-inch-wide stream of fuel shooting into the sea for about half an hour, said the ship's captain, John Withers.

U.N. military spokesman Maj. David Stockwell said the fuel had too high a flash point to be ignited by grenades.

Dangers of dollar demise against the yen remote but troublesome

By RICK GLADSTONE

BUSINESS NEWS

The dollar's renewed plunge against the yen may help sell more Jeeps in Japan and fewer Sonys in the States, but economists say it also raises risks that range from higher American inflation to a deep Japanese recession.

Moreover, some contend that trading frictions driving the dollar lower and yen higher are subverting the broader bond between the United States and Japan, a pillar of Asian stability for the past four decades.

"The glue that held together the U.S.-Japan security relationship has weakened," said William Sterling, an international economist at Merrill Lynch & Co. in New York.

Concern about the long-term consequences of the dollar's depreciation against the yen intensified this past week, as the U.S. currency plunged close to its all-time low of 105.10 yen after a brief period of strengthening because of a political crisis in Japan.

Foreign exchange market traders concluded the Clinton administration, which has been talking up the yen since early this year, wants to see it go higher still despite the aggravations that may cause inside Japan.

In theory, the stronger yen will help narrow the $50 billion U.S. trade deficit with Japan by making Japanese goods more expensive in the United States while making American goods more affordable to Japanese buyers.

That means American manufacturers would sell more goods in both countries, strengthening profits, employment and prosperity in the United States.

But the theory depends partly on the willingness of Japanese and American consumers to buy greater quantities of U.S. merchandise.

It also depends on Japanese government willingness to lower trade barriers that historically have obstructed foreign business penetration of Japanese markets. Clinton administration negotiators have been pressing Japan on trade obstacles with little success.

Critics of the pricey-yen theory frequently point to what they call the proof of its failure - the dollar's fall from a 250-yen level in 1984 to the 125-level in 1991.

That 50 percent plunge in the dollar's value resulted in only a marginal narrowing of the U.S.-Japan trade deficit. Part of the reason was that Japanese exporters largely absorbed the exchange-rate cost, so American consumers barely noticed a difference in the prices of many Japanese goods.

But this time Japanese exporters have been raising prices to compensate for the yen's rise, which has helped some U.S. manufacturers sell more at home.

But that still hasn't made a significant difference in the trade imbalance between the two countries.

On the contrary, it has contributed to the risk of higher inflation.

It also has elevated the danger that Japanese companies, which are just beginning to emerge from a recession, might lapse back into it because of slower sales.

"Japanese goods are higher priced. Consumers and producers will suffer because of that," said Arthur Alexander, president of the Japan Economics Institute, a Japanese government-funded research group in Washington.

Margin loans lead low rate parade

NEW YORK (AP) - If you do business at a securities brokerage firm, you may have access to a source of credit you haven't thought much about.

In fact, a typical firm where people have investments such as stocks, bonds or even mutual funds is likely to offer loans at lower interest rates than can be found almost anywhere else - in extreme cases, as little as 5 percent.

But financial advisers caution that there is a long list of catches and caveats to be considered before you borrow "on margin," using your investment assets as collateral.

The most common use for margin debt is to finance the purchase of securities such as stocks with greater leverage than simply buying for cash.

Current rules allow you to borrow as much as half the purchase price of stock, and as much as 70 percent to 90 percent on a corporate or government bond.

But "margin financing is not limited to investing," says William Brennan, editor of the Financial Planning Reporter newsletter at the accounting firm of Ernst & Young.

"You can borrow against securities and use the money for whatever purpose you choose. Today's low interest rates combine with convenient access and flexible repayment terms to make margin loans very attractive for non-investment purposes."

Still, margin loans may not be advisable at all for anyone who lacks the experience, financial resources and self-discipline that is often required to navigate sudden financial storms.

For one thing, these loans are open-ended, lacking any repayment schedule, and can be very costly in the long run.

Lender's Day in Court Yields a Happy Ending

By Abigail Van Buren

© 1993 Universal Press Syndicate

DEAR ABBY: I am writing to you about the letter signed "Practically Broke in Iowa."

I also loaned some money to a friend, and after that I couldn't find him. He never answered my letters, and I couldn't get him on the telephone.

After three years, I took my family's advice. Even though this man had been a very good friend of mine, I took him to small claims court. I didn't think I had a chance of getting my money back because, like the man who wrote to you, I didn't have anything in writing. I was foolish, I know, but I really was naive and trusting, because we were such good friends.

Well, I got all my money back, plus court costs, plus interest on my money!

So, sometimes a verbal agreement is just as binding as a written one. I didn't have a lawyer to represent me. I represented myself! Abby, I don't know what the laws are in Iowa, but I would advise that Iowan who got taken for a ride to look into it.

If you use my letter, please don't use my name. Sign me ...

LUCKED OUT IN ILLINOIS

DEAR LUCKED OUT: Congratulations. You lucked out with a sympathetic judge.

DEAR ABBY: My problem is actually more of a complaint — not one of major importance, but it has bothered me for years.

I have been "Mrs. Dow" ever since my marriage 44 years ago, and in all that time, I have been called "Mrs. Doe," "Mrs. Dowd," "Mrs. Dowdy" and even "Mrs. Downey."

When I meet someone, I make it a point to say, "My name is Mrs. Dow." Then I spell it, "D-O-W," and they still can't get it right.

I would think almost everyone has heard of the Dow Jones averages — statistics that show the trends of stocks and bonds traded on the New York Stock Exchange. Also, there's the Dow Chemical Co., founded more than a century ago.

I was recently hospitalized, and two nurses insisted on calling me "Mrs. Doe."

All my in-laws seem to have the same trouble. Everyone can say "cow," "now" and "how," but they have trouble with Dow. Can a word with only three letters, pronounced just the way it is spelled, be that difficult?

Thanks for letting me get this off my chest; I feel better now.

MRS. DOW IN FLORIDA

DEAR MRS. DOW: After this hits print, you may have less trouble. I hope so.

Corporate profit prospects rattle market; third quarter looks better

By MARYBETH NIBLEY

WEEKLY WALL STREET

NEW YORK (AP) - Like a jarring refrain, company after company has sounded warning signals lately about its financial performance, tripping alarms on Wall Street.

Ominous previews of second-quarter results due for release starting next month have triggered a series of setbacks for the stock market. From airlines to makers and marketers of toys, tools, computers, candy, sneakers and so on, the word on the street is: beware.

"There's a lot of concern about the second-quarter results," said Peter Sullivan, head of institutional trading at Tucker Anthony Inc. in Boston. "The anticipation of quarterly earnings has slowed this market down considerably. People are thinking a little more pessimistically than they had been previously."

The late spring deluge of grim income forecasts has created such an inclement climate that it contributed to the decision of a few companies to drop or postpone previously scheduled public stock offerings.

Retail stocks, for instance, all suffered after mass market heavyweight Kmart Corp. said it expects second fiscal quarter profits to be "significantly below" a year ago because of weak apparel sales.

Not surprisingly, specialty department store operator Parisian Inc., of Birmingham, Ala., on Friday cited the "unfavorable market for retail stocks" as the reason for putting its planned IPO on hold.

Big and small American companies are preparing investors for disappointment as the second quarter draws to a close. Despite the gloomy predictions, earnings probably will turn out moderately higher.

A cumulative forecast based on analysts' estimates done by IBES Inc., the Institutional Brokers Estimate System, indicates total net income of about 3,000 companies is expected to increase by more than 15 percent in the April-June quarter compared with last year.

Cautionary earnings forecasts have overshadowed the fact that the vast majority of companies are prospering. Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co. managed to grab some attention on Thursday and offset some concerns when it said second-quarter income would climb to $130 million to $140 million from $106.9 million a year earlier.

In financial markets where expectations of an event typically count for more than the actual event, release of the second-quarter results will be anticlimatic.

Commentators are beginning to pooh-pooh the recent earnings-related jitters and advise investors to shift their focus beyond the second quarter's horizon.

Writing in a weekly strategy report, Greg A. Smith of Prudential Securities Inc., said the earnings season won't be disastrous and the market will stage a rally sometime later this summer.

Tracy Herrick, chief investment strategist at Jefferies & Co. Inc. in San Francisco, said corporate balance sheets will benefit from generous growth in the supply of money that started in late May and continued into June.

He contends "the third quarter is going to be stronger than most analysts believe because of the recent expansion of money supply." The stock market finished a seesaw week on a subdued note Friday.

The Dow Jones industrial average eked out a minor gain of 0.28, bringing it to 3,490.89 and producing a decline for the week of 3.88 points.

The Nasdaq composite index rose 6.09 points to 694.81, adding 5.22 for the week.

The New York Stock Exchange's composite index moved 0.60 ahead to 247.20, making it 2.26 points higher for the week.

At the American Stock Exchange the market value index ended at 430.57, off 0.42 on Friday and down 6.25 for the week.

Trinidad govt mortgage company considers end to lending

PORT-OF-SPAIN, Trinidad (AP) - A government-owned company is considering the suspension of further lending to prospective homeowners.

The company makes loans to people who wish to buy finished houses.

Trinidad and Tobago Mortgage Finance Ltd. General Manager Carlton Robinson said Thursday the company does not have the funds to match the commitments it has given to prospective homeowners.

Robinson said there is no likelihood that it would be able to get the necessary money from the government.

He said the other option for funding would be by borrowing the money through a bond issue, but by law the company lends at an eight percent interest rate while in a bond issue it would be forced to borrow at a minimum nine percent.

Weight training reduces risk of osteoporosis

By IRA DREYFUSS

Lifestyle Sports

WASHINGTON (AP).- Osteoporosis doesn't afflict just women, and weight training may help men grow more bone and reduce their risk of developing the condition.

"If they increase bone mineral density, it reduces the risk factor for fractures," said Ben F. Hurley, an associate professor at the University of Maryland. "And bone density does decrease for men. Osteoporosis is more prevalent for women, but men do lose bone."

Osteoporosis is a condition in which bone loses two key elements, the protein collagen and the mineral calcium, becoming less dense and thus more easily broken. Although it's more severe among women after menopause, it develops in men and women after the age of 30. By age 70, studies indicate, men have lost 10 percent of their bone density.

Hurley and his colleagues in the university's Exercise Science Laboratory wanted to see if strength work could be used to fight this. Their report is in the American Physiological Association's Journal of Applied Physiology.

The researchers studied 18 previously inactive untrained men ages 50-70, with an average age of 59.

The men worked out three times a week for 16 weeks, doing 15 repetitions each of about a dozen strength exercises involving the upper and lower body.

They worked hard. Researchers first determined how much resistance the men could push no more than five times, and started their workouts at that level. Whenever the exercisers neared a point at which they could do no more, the researchers lowered the resistance just enough to let them keep going.

"We wanted to make sure they could do almost maximal effort," Hurley said. Just the same, the effort is probably not much different from what a weight trainer does in a health club when he performs 12 repetitions and can't complete the 13th, said Hurley, who is director of the exercise lab. The researchers measured strength gains, and looked at bone density with a sophisticated X-ray device.

Strawberry is in the doghouse

LOS ANGELES (AP) - Darryl Strawberry is in the Dodgers' doghouse.

Late to the park for the second time in two weeks, Strawberry was docked a day's pay - $19,230 - for showing up in the middle of Los Angeles' 1-0 loss to Houston at Dodger Stadium on Thursday.

General manager Fred Claire also warned Strawberry, who is on the disabled list with a chronic back problem, that the next time he's late, it will be more than a fine.

"I told him what we had done and told him that, in the future, I would not only give him a fine but would suspend him," Claire said after meeting with Strawberry in manager Tom Lasorda's office for about 10 minutes after the game.

Claire added, " ... I don't anticipate any more problems."

Strawberry would not comment on the fine, silently walking away from reporters in the clubhouse.

Last time, Strawberry wasn't late for the start of the game but for the daily therapy on his back, which he's supposed to have 75 minutes before game time.

He was not fined for that, but he was removed from the lineup for that game, June 13 in San Diego. He responded by taking a bat and shattering a water cooler in the clubhouse, but was back in the lineup for the next game.

On Thursday, he phoned about 45 minutes before the start of the afternoon game to say he was going to be late, but Claire didn't buy his excuse.

"He gave a reason but I won't go into that because it wasn't good enough for me," Claire said. "Basically, barring something totally unusual, there is no good reason to report to a ballpark after the game has started."

Cleveland Indians Ojeda speaks out on fatal Miami boat crash

By CHUCK MELVIN
AP Sports Writer

CLEVELAND (AP) - Bob Ojeda never lost consciousness and knew almost immediately that his two Cleveland Indians teammates had been killed when their boat slammed into a dock on a central Florida lake three months ago.

Ojeda, nervous and with a scarred forehead visible beneath the bill of his cap, spoke with the media in public Friday for the first time since being seriously injured in the March 22 boating accident that killed relief pitchers Steve Olin and Tim Crews.

The three had just gone onto Little Lake Nellie for some fishing in the evening following a family picnic when the boat, piloted by Crews, hit the dock. Olin, 27, was killed instantly, and Crews, 31, was pronounced dead the next day.

Ojeda, 35, needed surgery to re-attach his scalp.

"We were going, and bam! I don't remember the bam part," Ojeda said, sitting in his Indians uniform in the dugout at Cleveland Stadium. "Then I heard some lady hollering, 'Are you guys OK?' And I told her, 'No, we need help.' EMS got there in five minutes, and if they hadn't, I would have bled to death. They were tremendous."

Ojeda said he saw Olin and Crews two seconds after impact and knew they could not be saved.

"I never was knocked out," he said. "They were gone."

Ojeda suspects he was spared because he slouches. Olin and Crews both sustained severe head injuries.

"I was inches away from the guys, but I slouch," Ojeda said. "That's why it missed me by half an inch."

Beer and vodka were found on the boat, and tests showed that Crews was legally drunk at the time of the accident. Only negligible amounts of alcohol were found in Olin and Ojeda.

But both Ojeda and Olin's widow, Patti, contend that Crews was perfectly capable of operating the 18-foot boat.

"That became an issue," Ojeda said. "I can't sit here and try to rebuff whatever. I know Crewser. I know he could have done brain surgery, if he was a brain surgeon. Certainly we're not choir boys. ... Everybody does things, then something bad happens, and we all look for reasons - why did that happen?"

Mrs. Olin, who has attended about a dozen Indians games this season, agreed that alcohol did not cause the accident.

"I suppose I could say that Steve was a passenger and Steve was sober, but people would say he should have been smart enough to not get on that boat in the first place," she told The (Cleveland) Plain Dealer in a story published Friday. "We spent the whole day with them, and I'm telling you, Steve would never have gotten on that boat if there was any doubt.

"I don't care what the legal limit was, Tim Crews was not drunk. If he was, I wouldn't have let my husband go out on a boat with him.

Maradona hangs up his boots

BUENOS AIRES, (AP) - Diego Maradona returned to Argentina Thursday and said he would not play soccer again.

Maradona, who returned from Spain following the expiration of his one-season contract with Sevilla in the Spanish first division, said that "after the match with Burgos, I realized it was the end for me."

Sevilla played Burgos June 13 in a Spanish league game.

During the match, Maradona was substituted for by coach and longtime mentor Carlos Bilardo, whom he insulted while talking to TV interviewers. The striker threw his captain's arm band on the ground, stormed off the field and said he would deal with Bilardo "like a man - if he is a man."

"Either Carlos was wrong or I was wrong that time," Maradona said Thursday. "We talked afterwards and straightened everything out."

Maradona said he would decide his future after a few days' rest with his family, but added, "I've returned for good. I'm not going anywhere. After 18 years in the soccer fields, it's practically decided that I'm not going to play any more."

He will not join the Argentine national team for the World Cup qualifying, but would just "watch the games on TV."

Argentina begins its qualifying schedule Aug. 1 at Peru.

Maradona said he has received "offers from all over the world" to continue his career, but that only his agent Marcos Franchi knew the details.

Maradona was captain of the Argentine national team when it won the World Cup in 1986 and finished second in 1990.

He began his career in Argentinos Juniors before moving to Boca Juniors - the 1980 Argentine champion - Spanish first-division club Barcelona, Napoli of the Italian first division and then Sevilla. He led Napoli to its two first Italian League titles in 1987 and 1990, and the 1991 UEFA Cup. Maradona's troubles mounted in Italy, culminating with a 15-month suspension for testing positive for cocaine in April 1991.

Upon his return from the suspension, Maradona refused to play with Napoli and, with FIFA strongly urging Napoli to transfer him, he moved to Sevilla for $7.5 million last October.

His performance proved disappointing, marked by unspectacular play, temper tantrums and truancy problems. Still under court supervision for a cocaine conviction in Argentina, he even missed the plane for Barcelona where he was to be a star attraction at an anti-drug benefit match last month.

Cold spell for consumer stocks

By CHET CURRIER
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK (AP) - The password "consumer" has opened very few doors for stock-market investors in the first half of 1993.

Food, clothing, tobacco, cosmetics - almost all of the major stock groups with close ties to consumer spending lagged as the market struggled to stay ahead of the break-even point.

That performance on Wall Street mirrored a basic problem on Main Street.

"The economic recovery has continued at a slow, but determined, pace," said Margo Vignola, a Salomon Brothers Inc. analyst.

"However, consumer confidence has slumped and retail demand has ebbed from the strong Christmas selling period - signaling that the better times ahead may be further away."

One standout exception to the trend has been the auto stocks, which have rallied sharply after a long period of disfavor as the domestic auto manufacturers have shown signs of a renaissance.

For the year through June 18, Dow Jones's index of auto manufacturing stocks boasted a gain of 27.41 percent, ranking No. 5 among 96 industry groups tracked by the financial publishing concern.

But otherwise, the year largely has been a downer for the major consumer sectors of the market.

In the retail industry, for instance, apparel retailers showed a loss of 11 percent; broad-line retailers were down 10.93 percent; drug-based retailers lost 11.26 percent, and specialty retailers dropped 8.23 percent.

Among manufacturers, household products fell 7.42 percent; beverages 6.07 percent; cosmetics and personal care 11.08 percent; apparel 13.58 percent; food 12.19 percent; footwear 14.66 percent, and tobacco 33.33 percent.

To some investment strategists, all this provides a signal that economic recovery, though it hardly seems to have begun, has nevertheless moved past the traditional early consumer-led phase to the latter stages, when business spending for plant and equipment takes the spotlight.

At the investment firm of Cowen & Co., for instance, "the model portfolio has recently been restructured to reflect a late-cycle strategy," the firm reports.

"Emphasis was increased in basic industry and capital goods. Interest-sensitive stocks, retailing, non-food staples and regional Bells were all deemphasized.

"This reflects conviction that this is the third, earnings-driven phase of the bull market, and that interest rates have bottomed."

Of course, many people are hoping that a strong and broadly based period of economic expansion will yet materialize, benefiting from pent-up demand left over from more than two years of subpar growth since the statistical end of the 1990-91 recession. In that setting, consumer stocks might pull some pleasant surprises.

"Solid growth in consumer spending is the key to a return to a healthier pace of U.S. economic expansion," says Daniel Laufenberg, chief U.S. economist at the investment management firm of IDS Financial Services.

ST. JOHN CHAPTER 10 verse 9
I am the door; by me if any man enter in, he shall be saved. And shall go in and out, and find pasture. The thief cometh not, but for to steal and to kill and to destroy; I am come that they might have life, and that they might have it more abundantly.

ST. LUKE CHAPTER 10
And the seventy returned again with joy, saying. Lord, even the devils are subject unto us through thy name. And he said unto them. I behold Satan as lighting fall from heaven. Behold i give unto you power to tread on serpents and scorpions, and over all the power of the enemy; and nothing shall by any means hurt you. Notwithstanding in this rejoice not, that the spirits are subject unto you; but rather rejoice, because your names are written in heaven.

Musically, Ronnie's voice is better than ever, and constant performing has honed his stage presence.

The Violators did a good job as back-up, considering that his material is not a standard calypso jam, they negotiated some tricky charts and did well for their first time behind him.

I still think that Ronnie is one of the major talents in the Caribbean. It was good to hear him again.

Want to do something to help fight crime on St. Croix?

So many times, efforts seen nebulous and unfocused. Often it seems that everyone is talking about the problem, but no-one is doing anything about it.

The St. Patrick's Day Parade Committee, with the cooperation of ScotiaBank, is spearheading an effort to purchase all-terrain vehicles for beach patrols on St. Croix. Donations can be dropped off at the bank made out to "All-Terrain" Account #058-01440-10.

Bingo Bongo in Peter's Rest kicked off the donations with a $1150.00 donation. The goal is $20,000. This is a direct way to cut down on crime at Sandy Point and elsewhere along our beaches. The safety of the public is everyone's business.

You also might want to start thinking about the St. Patrick's Day Parade.

While it's more than half a year away, that gives everyone plenty of time to start thinking about a prize winning float idea. Come up with a mindboggling concept, then spend the next six months figuring out how to make it work.

Mr. McCoy, the CEO, has been working with vendors to settle an arrange for past due bills. In one instance, a substantial settlement was negotiated by Mr. McCoy if it, and future bills are paid in 30 days or a reasonable time. Finance in St. Thomas refused to act!!

Meanwhile, we read in the St. Thomas paper Saturday, June 19th, that Governor Alexander A. Farrelly authorized the release, ahead of time, of $5.1 Million for the St. Thomas Hospital to make various payments to vendors and others.

St. Thomas has possibly 5 consultant contracts - - all in place. St. Croix is forgotten. Let's follow Chairman Derrick Steinmann's advice. Lets write, call, or fax the Governor and all the Senators, particularly St. Croix senators, stating we demand an effort to get the St. Croix Hospital recertified.

Meanwhile, some favorable news. Partially as a result of ST. CROIX NOW meetings with Senate Vice President Pickard, she has called for a St. Croix Caucus in the Senate and called for meetings with the St. Croix Chamber of Commerce Board and with ST. CROIX NOW officials. We want to help all the St. Croix and the At large Senator's establish a St. Croix Caucus, which on St. Croix makes matters will not be subservient to the majority caucus.

when we depend on catching rain water from our roofs for drinking and other uses?" queried Richardson. He emphasized the airborne toxins would present a dangerous health risk to VI residents.

Because of our limited landscape, the senate president stated, landfills would not solve the problem. "I've gone on record in opposition to our present system of solid waste disposal," Richardson stated, "There is an urgent need to protect our environment and fragile ecosystem. This is just the beginning of the battle against incineration," he told the UVI workshop attendees. He called on those with a deeper knowledge and awareness of the negative impact incineration would have on the Virgin Islands to communicate their ideas and concern to the executive branch of government.

As an alternative Richardson suggested taking a closer look at waste destruction technology, a system which has been tested and approved by the federal government's environmental specialists. The waste destruction technology was begun in 1978 under the non-nuclear energy act of 1974. With destructive distillation there is no burning or incineration of solid waste in the process. It results in the complete decomposition of biomass in the hyperbaric waste distillator, and once broken down produces component gases and charcoal residue. Richardson noted that the national trend is to move away from incineration of solid waste, and toward this clean and cost-efficient method of waste destructive distillation.

The UVI Cooperative Extension service workshop continues on Thursday night at the Maclean Marine Science Center. Senator George Goodwin, Chairman of the Senate planning and Environmental protection committee will deliver the introductory remarks. The workshop begins at 7 p.m. couldn't acquire more territory unless they intended to make it a state. Size, location or racial make-up is not an issue, it's a matter of law," he said.

Whether or not Virgin Islanders vote for statehood, Schoenbohm said the status-quo option is unacceptable.

"Independence or statehood, either one. But we have to put an end to the current system. The liberal welfare state in the Virgin Islands is a form of apartheid," he said.

"The enemies present now know no borders," he said. "Even before the RSS was formed, we instinctively came to each others' assistance - but the System cannot only be reactive, it must be proactive, which demands careful organization, planning and cooperative exchanges of information on an ongoing basis."

If not international drug trade through the Caribbean stands to flourish, he said.

"Unless this is done, our efforts to control trafficking of narcotics, of operation of organized crime and criminal activities will be completely negated, as our defensive nets will be too porous," he said. "New threats - though less visible - are no less dangerous. Perhaps they are more so because they come from within in ready supply to corrupt and undermine our society."

The Prime Minister said Tradewinds '93 was testimony that numerous Caribbean military and police forces can work together.

"What is needed now is the political will to weave our capabilities and start to provide the protection under which people of the Caribbean can carry out their social and economic activities in peace and security."

financially giving aid to St. Croix. The government has decided against Hess proposal to exempt Hess from taxes so that Hess could in turn aid St. Croix.

However, I firmly believe that with an amendment of the organic act to create municipal government St. Croix would get the opportunity to receive aid from Hess Oil. Hess is a multi million dollar corporation and with a tax exemption and his help to maintain schools, hospital, roads, public works and utilities St. Croix would become as mentioned previously an island with a stable economy and without a shadow of a doubt will be seen as a true paradise.

In conclusion ladies and gentlemen, after all this is accomplished St. Croix would no longer be the backside of the Virgin Islands but a knight in shining armor. I firmly believe that St. Croix should seek autonomy over St. Thomas because we have adequate human and financial resources. Most of all if St. Croix gain autonomy it would no longer have to sit under the table and await the crumbs as they fall from St. Thomas. We will control our income and expense and most of all determine our destination.

To you the readers it has been my pleasure to enlightening you on the reasons why most Crucians believe that St. Croix could stand alone and prosper.

Holyfield gets points decision over Stewart

175,000 show up at Suns party

PHOENIX (AP) - An estimated 175,000 Phoenix Suns fans jammed the city's downtown area Saturday to salute their team, which posted the NBA's best record this season but lost to the Chicago Bulls in the championship series.

Charles Barkley, the league's MVP in his first year with Phoenix, sent the crowd into a frenzy by saying the Suns should win their first NBA title next season.

"I did not come here to be a runner-up," said Barkley, who was obtained in a June 1992 trade with the Philadelphia 76ers. "I expected a day like this but I also expected us to win the championship. We'll show them next year. We can't wait until next year."

"I wish we could start tomorrow," Suns president Jerry Colangelo said. "This is a great way to wrap up a great year that had everything except a world championship."

The Suns, in their 25th anniversary season, went 62-20 during the regular season to win the Pacific Division championship.

They then beat the Los Angeles Lakers, San Antonio Spurs and Seattle SuperSonics in the playoffs to claim the Western Conference title and reach the NBA Finals for only the second time in their history.

But like in 1976, when Phoenix lost in six games to the Boston Celtics, the Suns were beaten in six games by the Bulls, who claimed their third consecutive NBA title.

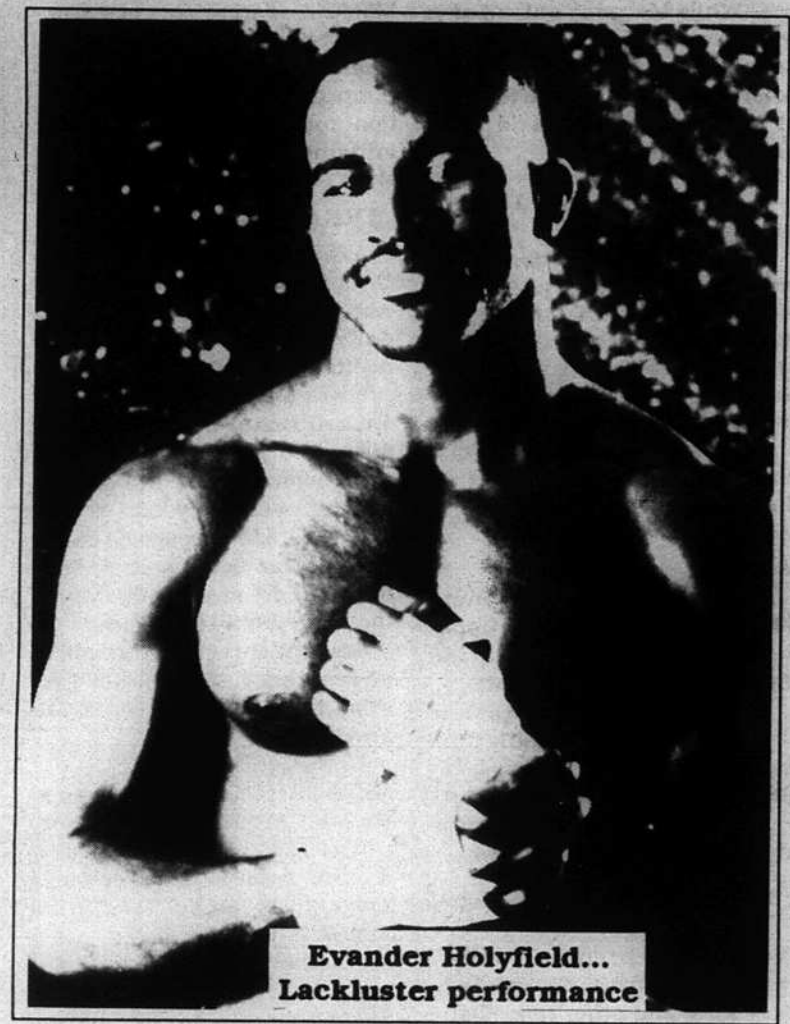

Still, fans dressed from head to toe in the Suns' colors braved 105-degree temperature and filled the streets surrounding America West Arena to cheer their heroes.

Arizona Gov. Fife Symington declared Saturday "Phoenix Suns Day" and Mayor Paul Johnson read a proclamation calling the team "a point of pride" for bringing the city national and world attention.

"The record book may show a different champion, but the Suns took an entire community on the ride of its life this year, gave it a shot in the arm amd made us all so proud," Johnson said.

City officials had predicted a crowd of 100,000 but many more than that turned out to line a parade route and listen to players and team officials speak from the arena's fourth-floor balcony.

"It was like a sea of purple and orange," Colangelo said. "It overwhelmed me.

Evander Holyfield... Lackluster performance

Convention center crowd boos lackluster victory

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J. (AP) - Evander Holyfield came back to boxing early Sunday morning with a victory, but it was anything but a triumphal one.

The former heavyweight champion scored a unanimous 12-round decision over Alex Stewart in a match that drew loud boos from the crowd at the Convention Center.

"I thought I fought a pretty good fight," said Holyfield, fighting for the first time since he lost the title to Riddick Bowe on Nov. 13.

"He was a game fighter. I know everybody wanted me to take him out in the first or second round."

Holyfield not only failed to take Stewart out, he never had him in serious trouble and he fought without much fire. In fact, it seemed what Stewart failed to do was as much a factor in Holyfield's victory as what the ex-champ did.

Judge Eugene Grant scored it 119-109 while Frank Brunette and Al De Vito each had it 118-110.

The Associated Press scored it 116-112 for Holyfield.

Holyfield hopes to get a rematch with Bowe in November.

His rematch with Stewart certainly did not come close to rivaling their action-packed first fight in which Holyfield stopped Stewart on a bad cut over the right eye in the eighth round Nov. 4, 1989.

Holyfield, who weighed 218, 10 pounds less than Stewart, opened a cut above Stewart's left eye 42 seconds into the second round. The cut, however, did not trouble Stewart for the rest of the fight.

Holyfield, who at times seemed to be fighting in slow motion, was much more active than Stewart, who often looked like a man kept up past his bedtime. The fight ended at 12:45 a.m. EDT.

Holyfield's best round may have been the 11th when he hurt Stewart with four or five good shots to the head, wobbled him with a big right hand with 50 seconds left in the round and then nailed him with a right-left just before the bell.

Todd Martin gives Ivanisevic marching orders

WIMBLEDON

WIMBLEDON, England (AP) - American Todd Martin, usually as composed as a professor with his fluffy brown beard and quiet demeanor, let loose a primal scream Saturday that shattered the sleepy silence of Wimbledon.

Just when it seemed that nearly all the big names would march jauntily and tediously into the second week, Martin's howl punctuated a 2-6, 7-6 (7-3), 6-7 (7-4), 7-5, 6-0 upset of last year's runner-up, Goran Ivanisevic.

It came after two improbable winners: a scooping backhand lob over the towering Ivanisevic, and a lunging clunker off the frame that spun crosscourt as if in slow motion before touching down inches from the sideline.

Those two shots broke Ivanisevic's service for the second time in the final set, gave the unseeded Martin a 4-0 lead and demoralized the No. 5 seed.

"That was probably as loud as anybody gets," said Martin, 22, a former All-American at Northwestern who is tall and lanky like a young Abe Lincoln from Illinois.

"I had to take some extra time, actually, after that point to regain my composure because I got just too much adrenaline pumping at once."

Martin, playing in only his second Wimbledon, settled down to hold serve at love with the help of his 16th ace, then watched Ivanisevic double-fault for the 15th time to lose the match.

Ivanisevic, who had 34 aces in his previous match but "only" 23 this time, stormed away and was fined $2,000 for spurning the post-match interview. He lost another $500 for throwing his racket and cracking it during the match.

Martin's victory was "certainly his biggest moment in tennis," said his coach, Tom Gullikson. A pro since 1990, Martin won his first tournament last month at Coral Springs, Fla., but even that doesn't measure up to this achievement.

"To beat a (defending) finalist at a prestigious event like Wimbledon, after being down a few times in the match, shows character, fighting spirit and a greater self-belief," Gullikson said.

Martin was in a similar position to win against Pete Sampras at the U.S. Open last summer, "but he didn't believe in himself," Gullikson said. "This just proves how much progress Todd's made since then." That loss to Sampras, after serving with a 2-0 lead in the fifth set, was on Martin's mind Saturday.

"I got to my ad and I forced a point and didn't do what I should have," he said. "I've replayed that point a few times in my head. It was a very good experience for me because I played a good game there today. That third game was the biggest key.

"Then in the fourth game I knew if I got one more break he might loosen up a bit mentally."

At 30-30 in the fourth game, Ivanisevic followed up his serve with a half-volley that sat up for Martin, who had plenty of time to think about what to do. With Ivanisevic standing in the middle of the court, Martin could have driven a backhand to either side and risked a volley by Ivanisevic. Instead, Martin flicked a lob that the 6-foot-4 Ivanisevic couldn't touch and could scarcely believe.
