Washington, Nov. 6 h.—Availability of the United States cooperation in the European economic crisis apparently hinged tonight, upon detailed explanations of the Poincare restrictions on the proposed expert enquiry into the reparations tangle. Up to this time, it was learned authoritatively, the Government has not been able to find out exactly what the French Premier had in mind in proposing to confine the inquiry to Germany's "present" capacity to make reparations payments. Conversations between President Coolidge and Ambassador Jusserand today and between the French Ambassador and Secretary Hughes yesterday, it is known, turned almost wholly upon the effort to determine the exact nature of the French restriction. As it had been translated in London, the French phrase reads: "Capacity to pay at present and for a limited future period." It was evident today that the Ambassador had been unable to amplify this sufficiently and has cabled his Government for a detailed explanation, for which governments officials here are awaiting with deep interest. In view of this situation, it was stated emphatically that reports that the negotiations had met a deadlock were wholly without foundation. Administration officials, on the contrary regard the door as still open to the United States cooperation in the search for a solution of the reparation problem, provided the Allied powers desire such aid. After President Coolidge's conferences today with the Ambassador Jusserand, which lasted nearly half an hour, a White House spokesman urged that the public exercise patience. It was pointed out that Europe's present economic plight had historic background and was not to be remedied on twentyfour hours notice. Matters of the utmost delicacy for the French Government are involved. This is recognized in Washington, although it is felt in administration circles that the economic situation is growing darker day by day and there is every reason to avoid delay in getting the experts to work. If the powers can reach an agreement on that course, there is no disposition to withdraw the offer of cooperation while there is any reasonable chance that the Allies can find a way to avail themselves of it.

COLDS

Colds of all descriptions point a way to lowered resistance and diminished vitality. Pneumonia and other painful and costly illnesses are most often the result of neglected Colds.
