IN REFERENCE TO THE DISORDERLY PUBLIC BEHAVIOUR AT THE POST OFFICE last Saturday evening, it was stated in the Avis of yesterday that the postmaster had called upon the civil authorities to preserve order but as no policeman could be secured, the office was closed. This remark appears to be susceptible of different inferences, and it is therefore considered expedient to make clear that the Police did not refuse to preserve order, nor were there policemen within reach who declined to respond to the call. The fact is that when the message reached the Police Station, only a corporal was on watch there, and he advised that the men were on the beat and therefore none could be detailed to the post office. On other occasions when it has been necessary to resort to the Police Department to maintain public order at the post office, its services have always been forthcoming but naturally such services are not regularly needed, and in the present instance happened to be required when really unavailable. In the account of yesterday, reference to that part of the matter was made particularly that the general public might be informed that the proper steps had been taken, although without success, to remedy a situation for which the general public was not responsible, but through which inconvenience had nevertheless been experienced.

The Contributor of "Little Johnny's Slate" asks to say to those who look for his weekly letter that this week's will be sent in tomorrow.

ONE WHO DID HIS "BIT."

We have in our midst Mr. Arthur Stephens of St. Thomas who is here in quest of his health.

Mr. Stephens was studying Organ Building in England when the War of the Nations broke out. Putting aside his studies he enlisted in the army and after some training was sent to the eastern frontier to do his "bit". He did it.

When the Russians played "hooky", Arthur was in the trenches. When the Turks came down like an avalanche and the British hurled them back, Stephens was with the victorious troops.

Among other places Mr. Stephens has seen service in India, Palestine, and Egypt.

May he find that elusive thing of which he is in search—good health.
