"EPIGRAMS AND WITTY SAYINGS"

Some people say that money will talk. That's a truthful and wonderful phrase; But we also know that money will walk, Though it doesn't go far now a-days.

"Woman is fickle", but we all know that. Why not make it: "Woman is brittle" for a change? Only that depends on how you "touch" 'em.

Some men swear by money, Some men swear by rum; I know it may sound funny, But such men are always bum.

Marriage is a lottery, "For better or for worse"; Some marriages are like pottery, A tinkle! A crash! Then a curse!

We all know girls who are peaches, We all know girls who are tart; But there's just one thing history teaches, We know that a girl has a heart.

Diplomacy seems to be the key-word these days. But the girls could have taught us that ages ago.

Chaperons seems to have quite gone out of date. Perhaps the explanation is because there are so many 'chaps aroun' these days.

"What's in a name, a rose by any name will smell as sweet". This may have been a bit of alright in William's day, but it won't work in these days. Just you go and make the fatal mistake of calling your present girl by her predecessor's name. What'll happen? Wait And See, that's all.

Never make love to a woman through an ink bottle" sounds mighty fine, but it needs to be altered in these days of self-filling fountain pens and indellible pencils.

"Building castles in the air" will soon have to be discontinued if the aeroplane business continues to soar.

He was "a case", She was a flirt; Now he's out of place, Tied to her skirt.

Some folks veto early marriage on the ground that the happy couple soon tire of each other. Perhaps that may be as it is, but about the only fault we can find with middle age marriage is that the supposed to be happy couple are both tired of it before they settle down to the grind of life.

LOVE! There is nothing like love. So-called love is only man's pent up desire, For a mate to chase away Life's smouldering fire, With her warm caress, And to win him back to high good humour with ner tenderness.

Most women are afraid of a mouse. One wonders how we can term them "spiteful cats". Certainly the inference isn't very clear. But perhaps it is only one of many means of "pulling their legs".

"Come hither, come hither, my pretty maid" "No sir", said she, "for I am afraid", "Afraid of what my dainty dame?" "Afraid, sir, of losing my good name".
