MAE MURRAY IN
"WHAT AM I BID."

Mae Murray was never more bewitching than in this appealing story of the little mountain girl who was nearly sold into slavery by her old drunken father for booze.

Come and see her fight with her drunken father, her "Intended" Husband and the Indian Chief "Dark Cloud" in which fight the little mountain girl is the Heroine, and see the Heroine's reward.

One thing can be said of this splendid picture that it holds the interest alive all the way through and from beginning to end shows the most beautiful scenery.

for tonight at the theatre where it is expected to see a full house.

In these days when there is perhaps much to make us grave, it was satisfying to note the smile on the faces of the staff; when from our windows yesterday morning was observed an attempt to convert the "Tel. Truck," alias Armstrong's C. 5, into a "Tank."

In this undertaking the fourth right pillar of the Post Office was selected for the enemy, and what was regarded as an "earthquake" throughout the building was explained by the fact that she was running on all four in high gear. The best advertisement for the Champion Spark Plug is the fact that the Post master could be seen an hour afterwards examining the glass facings in the new boxes. We would suggest that our drivers select buildings of a newer type with less "Albortement" for testing the H.P. of cars entrusted to their care. Should we view this matter seriously however we are compelled to think that there are a number of persons holding licenses whose incapacity to handle a car must be a source of danger to the public, and would urge an investigation into this matter.
