NEW MONEY.

Hundreds of boxes of grapefruit that in former years were buried or dumped into the sea at New York as unfit for food this year will be converted into canned grapefruit for which people in the United States will pay enough money to give a profit to the producers and canners. What before was not only a waste but a source of loss is now being converted into a food product that is rapidly becoming a staple commodity.

Making two blades of grass grow where only one grew before is no more commendable than converting what was once a waste into a useful product. One is as satisfactory a means as the other of making new money.—Porto Rico Progress, Nov. 11th.
