No money; civil trials postponed

By PATRICK ROGERS
Avis Staff Writer

The wheels of justice ground to a halt Monday, at least for District Court civil trials, because there's no money to pay jury members.

See related story, page 3

But it's not just a local problem- all 94 District Courts across the country suspended civil trials until Congress appropriates $5.5 million for jury payments.

The last civil trials on St. Croix were held June 18.

The House of Representatives next week will consider a bill that restores funding for jury

Emergency service coming to STX first

St. Croix is expected to get 911 emergency telephone service within 30 days, months before St. Thomas and St. John, according to a source close to the Public Service Commission.

The regulatory agency is scheduled to meet Tuesday in St. Thomas with an agenda that includes the signing of a binding agreement with the Virgin Islands Telephone Corporation and the Virgin Islands Government that Requires the phone company to implement the service throughout the territory.

Twenty-four-hour-a-day operators and dispatchers will be located in both district police headquarters to answer emergency fire, police, and ambulance calls from residents who dial 9-1-1 from any phone.

The universally recognized emergency number replaces the present V.I. System that requires dialing 9-2-1 for fire services, 9-1-5 for police, and 9-2-2 for ambulance calls.

But because renovation of the Patrick Sweeney Police Headquarter in Golden Grove, St. Croix, is far ahead of similar refurbishment of VIPD's waterfront headquarters in Charlotte Amalie, the consolidated emergency telephone service could be on line here within the month.

St. Thomas-St. John service will follow a few months later as St. Thomas police personnel begin to reoccupy space in Charlotte Amalie's Criminal Justice Complex.

The 911 concept was first passed into law by the Fifteenth Legislature in 1986 but funding was never identified in any of the subsequent seven V.I. Government budgets.

This week's pact ends nearly three years of negotiations since the PSC ruled that VITELCO had overcharged telephone subscribers in the post Hurricane Hugo period between April 1, and Dec. 31, 1990.

In lieu of direct cash rebates to subscribers by VITELCO for the 1990 overcharge, the PSC has agreed to let VITELCO set up the 911 service without any cost passed on to its customers. Equipment and start-up costs are estimated to exceed $1 million.

In the September 1991 issue of the "Blue Striper," a VITELCO - published newsletter, the phone company predicted that "Vitelco customers could have the service available by early 1992. The company planned to install and operate the territory-wide system in its Charlotte Amalie facilities.

But several months later VITELCO withdrew its offer to operate the system when the V.I. government would not agree to give the privately-owned phone company immunity from liability stemming from any willful acts of its employees.

'My son is bringing in the ship'

A happy Father's Day for local couple

By JEANNE FRASER BROOKS
Avis Staff Writer

Father's Day was extra special for one Frederiksted father this year.

Achilles Flores and his wife Valentina were on the temporary pier in Frederiksted at 8:00 Sunday morning waiting for the U.S.S. Truett to dock.

"My son is bringing in the ship," said the proud father as he set up his video camera.

The smile never left Flores' face even though it took two hours longer than anticipated for the ship to dock.

When it finally did, Lieutenant Edward A. Flores was the first person down the gangway to give his father a big Father's Day hug.

Lt. Flores, 31 and single, is a 1980 graduate of St. Joseph's High School and a 1984 graduate of the U.S. Naval Academy at Annapolis, MD.

Trinidad woman to face drug charges on STX

By LINDSAY MACKOON

PORT OF SPAIN, - Extradition of Lolita Saroop, a 32-year-old Trinidadian woman, to St. Croix was on Friday ordered by a local magistrate here.

She is to stand trial on drug trafficking in the United States Virgi.. Islands where she is wanted on a four-count indictment.

But Magistrate Byron Hendriques, presiding in the Port of Spain Fourth District Court, instructed that Saroop be committed to prison for a mandatory 15-day grace period before being sent to the United States.

The grace period, the magistrate said, was to give her the right to appeal.

Saroop, who was detained last Friday on a warrant, is charged with Trinidadian Rajnauth Ramdhan, Burrell Gill of St. Croix and others with conspiring to smuggle cocaine and crack into the US from Trinidad between July 1989 and June 1990.

She faces three other charges relating to unlawful possession of narcotics on board an aircraft entering the U.S., smuggling, and having cocaine with intent to distribute it.

Both Ramdhan and Gill were convicted. Gill, however, has been jailed but Ramdhan is facing a prison term in the US.

A warrant for Saroop's arrest was issued on Nov. 3, 1992, by US judge Geoffrey Resnick, presiding in the St. Croix District Court.

Affidavits tendered in court during the two-day hearing stated that Saroop, also know as "Daughter," was the alleged cocaine and crack supplier in Trinidad for two couriers returning to St. Croix.

Health commissioner seeks more funding

By DEBRA DUROCHER
Avis Staff Writer

Health Department officials are building a case to get additional funding from the V.I. government, according Health Commissioner Dr. Alfred O. Heath.

"My team is paring down the budget - we've cut away all the fat, we're down to the marrow," he said. "If we cannot meet mandatory costs, we will have to speak to somebody."

And that somebody is likely to be not just one senator, but the whole Senate, in the form of a request for a supplemental budget.

"We're preparing our case," Heath said. "We already have been working within our budget, but it's having an effect on personnel - we cannot bring more on board, and the ones already doing double duty are doing double and a half duty."

He said DOH was cut by 7.9 percent for the fiscal year 1993 budget, which runs out Sept. 30. The Department was allotted $27.8 million for the year, which falls $2.1 million short of last year's funding level.

"The full impact of the cuts hasn't hit us yet," he said. "But we're gearing up for the challenge."

Heath said he personally has felt the cutbacks over the years. Since he became Commissioner he is on-call at the hospital on Mondays - a weekly shift for which he doesn't bill the government, he said.

And trimmed funding means trimmed staff. Heath answered his own phone Monday afternoon - he said managing DOH is tough, with all the assistant commissioners on St. Croix and him on St. Thomas.

"I don't have the help that I need," he said.

He said the cuts to come have yet to be decided. DOH officials said last month mentally ill patients in stateside facilities could have to return for lack of funding.

But Heath said it will not be "en masse" - it would be one or two patients. He said the stateside care is a mandatory cost, one that DOH cannot afford to cut.

A big portion of DOH's mandate is preventative care, which Heath said takes a back seat to crisis care even though money spent on prevention means dollars saved in the future.

"Sooner or later, you're going to have to focus on prevention," he said.

STX nurse one of few chosen for CPR course in states

By JEANNE FRASER BROOKS
Avis Staff Writer

A member of the St. Croix Hospital staff is one of only 75 nurses chosen nationally to attend the Disaster Nursing Institute in Georgia later this month.

Lydia M. Thomas, R.N., Director of Risk Management, will travel to Forsyth, Georgia, where she will take introductory courses in First Aid and CPR and Introduction to Disaster Services, and take part in Instructor Candidate Training.

Thomas is the first, and so far, only, person to hold the position of Director of Risk Management at the St. Croix Hospital.

"The position was created in 1987 when the Department of Health established its self-insurance malpractice insurance program," said Thomas.

After what Thomas describes as "being with the Red Cross as a volunteer just about all my life," she was a natural for the position which calls for assessing different courses of action.

Thomas started with the St. Croix Hospital "about three decades ago" as the Assistant Director of Nurses after graduating from New York University's School of Nursing, Columbia University's Teacher's College, and the University of Vermont.

Through the years she has held numerous leadership positions in nursing and nursing administration on the job, and in the Red Cross at the "local, Caribbean and national level.

Thomas was the Red Cross St. Croix Chapter Chairman when Hurricane Hugo hit the island almost four years ago.

"One of the things we've learned in the Disaster Health Services is that you've got to be prepared to take care of yourself and not wait" when a disaster hits.

"Where do we [Virgin Islanders] go for disaster relief if a hurricane hits here and moves up the East Coast? Red Cross procedures are appropriate for the St. Croix Hospital staff because our options are limited—we have to jump right in," said Thomas.

Thomas has taken what she's learned through the years as a Red Cross volunteer and applied it to her professional life much to the benefit of the St. Croix Hospital staff and to the members of the community.

Joining Thomas in Georgia will be Eleanor Chapman and Gloria Callwood from St. Thomas each of whom will take just a portion of the course.

Crucians should demand a better hospital

By PATRICK ROGERS
Avis Staff Writer

Crucians have to "demand" better health care from their government run hospital, according to hospital board chairman, Derrick Steinmann.

Steinmann and the hospital's Chief Executive Officer, George McCoy, told community group St. Croix Now Saturday that residents must pressure Senators and Governor Farrelly to give the hospital the money it needs to provide quality health care.

"The only way to get results is to grab the attention of our elected officials. We have to send them letters and faxes and make phone calls. Crucians haven't done enough to demand that the situation at their hospital improve," Steinmann said.

The hospital's board, and administration, are fighting for management of the day to day business of the hospital now controlled by the government.

"We must disentangle ourselves from the government," Steinmann said.

"We can't hire a nurse without the governor signing the papers. If we need supplies, we have to go to Property and Procurement, if we want to write checks, we have to go to the Finance Department, for budget matters, we have to go to Office of Management and Budget. This is an intolerable situation," Steinamnn said.

Senate Health Committee Chairwoman, Lorraine Berry, is "looking at legislation" that if passed would give the hospital the autonomy it seeks, ac-

Construction thief in court

By PATRICK ROGERS
Avis Staff Writer

A builder accused of bilking a customer out of a $20,000 deposit for construction supplies was in Magistrate Court Monday for an advise of rights hearing.

Prosecutors charged Barry L. McAllister, principal of Trust Builders, with a three count mail fraud indictment.

McAllister allegedly told Charles Gilbert in 1990 that he would use Gilbert's $20,000 deposit to open an account at a Puerto Rico building supply company.

The supplies were to be used to build Gilbert's Estate Slob home.

According to information filed in District Court, McAllister opened an account with Island Trade Inc. on Puerto Rico but "only a small portion" of the money was used for supplies. Prosecutors say McAllister used the rest of the money for himself.

McAllister will be held in Anna's Hope Detention Center pending a detention hearing Wednesday.

Government celebrates Organic Act

CHARLOTTE AMALIE, St. Thomas (AP) - Local government officeswere closed yesterday (Monday) for the Organic Act holiday, one of twenty-five holidays given to the government's roughly ten thousand workers each year.

The holiday is celebrated to acknowledge the enactment by Congress of the Organic Act, the federal law governing the territory. The act was amended in 1954.

Banks and most businesses remained open.

When the government returns to work today, the Senate's Finance Committee will meet to act on a proposed government-back windstorm insurance plan developed by Lieutenant Governor Derek Hodge.

Hodge, the territory's insurance commissioner, says the plan will fill a void in homeowner's insurance left in the wake of Hurricane Hugo in 1989, which caused an estimated one billion dollars in damages in the territory and led to an exodus of major insurers.

Under the plan, five million dollars will be taken from a fund established for Hurricane Hugo victims and placed in another government fund to cover damages from hurricanes for home-owning residents.

Each owner who occupies a home will be eligible to purchase coverage from the government for up to two hundred thousand dollars in damages.

Parolee arrested

CHRISTIANSTED, St. Croix (AP) - A thirty-nine-year-old Texas man is expected to be returned this week to Texas following his weekend arrest on a parole violation.

Police say Dewight Gene Akers was arrested Saturday afternoon at the Hess oil refinery, where he worked. Police say he was arrested on an extradition warrant issued in Harris County, Texas for parole violations.

However, authorities did not specify the violations or say what crime Akers was convicted of committing.

Citizens rally for statehood

CHARLOTTE AMALIE, St. Thomas (AP) - A small coalition of citizens is promoting the statehood option for a non-binding referendum on political status scheduled here in September.

The group says voters should select the statehood option, one of three which will be on the referendum, to secure full civil rights for themselves. The Virgin Islands is an unincorporated territory and received hundreds of millions of dollars in federal funds each year.

Residents are classified as U-S citizens but they do not vote in presidential elections. On September 7th voters can pull the lever for statehood, independence or remain an unincorporated territory. If one of the three options does not receive a fifty-percent-plus-one majority, a runoff will be held between the two top picks.

As many as two more will be held through November if either option fails to receive a majority. Discussions and workshops on status are scheduled Mondays and Saturdays at the Senate, the government-run television station and several private radio stations.

Navy seeks thugs who beat sailors

By PATRICK ROGERS

The St. Thomas\St. John Council of the U.S. Navy League is offering a $5,000 reward for the capture and prosecution of the thugs who attacked three U.S. Maritime Service personnel last week on St. Thomas.

Local businesses and citizens have also contributed to the fund, according to a prepared release from the Navy League.

The sailors were on shore leave from the USS Yorktown when the attack occurred.

Lt. Robert D. Bartlett, 31, who was shot in the head during the holdup, is in extremely critical condition in a San Juan hospital.

The other shooting victim in the robbery attempt, Petty officer 3rd Class Michael Nendze, 27, was released from the hospital Friday.

> -Navy reward plea

A third officer who was beaten with a baseball bat, was treated at the St. Thomas Hospital and released Thursday.

The three officers were using a telephone when they were attacked by two men wielding a handgun and a baseball bat.

The reward fund will "assist the law enforcement authorities to place top priority on solving this heinous crime," the release said.

The Navy League is asking St. Thomas residents "to help take these criminals off our streets and keep our citizens, tourists and our won sons and daughters in the Armed Services safe from further attacks."

Forty three Navy ships made recreation stops on St. Thomas last year, bringing at least $11 million to the St. Thomas economy, according to reports.

But Navy officials are said to be considering cutting out St. Thomas as a recreational port-of-call because of the attacks on sailors.

GERS to vote today on WICO financing

By DEBRA DUROCHER
Avis Staff Writer

The Government Employees Retirement System Board will decide today whether or not it will loan the Public Finance Authority money to finance the government's purchase of the West Indian Co. Ltd.

Board chair Alda Monsanto said Monday the Board will meet today to discuss the terms they want in order to make an $18 million bridge loan to the PFA worthwhile.

"We have to say yes or no by [today] because if our terms are not satisfactory to the Public Finance Authority, they will have to explore other avenues," Monsanto said. "The hour is very late."

She said a GERS decision today is needed in order for the government to meet its June 30 closing for the WICO purchase. The government signed a stock purchase agreement to buy WICO for $48 million plus $6 million in tax abatements.

The government, in turn, sold Havensight Mall to the GERS for $32 million, and is currently negotiating to temporarily borrow $18 million from the entity to have funding for the purchase in place before the closing date.

Monsanto said she could not discuss the loan's terms, since it could damage negotiations with the government.

The GERS signed a non-disclosure agreement when it went into

Cash shortage forces delay in federal civil trials

WASHINGTON (AP) - A shortage of money to pay jurors is forcing a delay in federal civil trials nationwide, but the disruption may be short-lived.

The Administrative Office of the U.S. Courts had warned that civil trials would have to shut down in mid-May if Congress didn't provide more money. But funds stretched a month longer than expected because 100 vacant judgeships weren't filled and those courts weren't operating, administrative office spokesman David Sellers said Monday.

"If you don't have judges, you can't have trials," he said.

But the problem may not last much longer.

The Senate is due Tuesday to resume consideration of a $1.9 billion supplemental spending bill that includes $5.5 million for federal court juries and $55 million for court-appointed attorneys, whose funds ran out May 27. The House has already passed a similar version of the bill.

The current shortfall for federal juries will not affect civil trials that have already begun or criminal trials, Sellers said. No estimate was available of the number of trials affected.

The Judicial Conference, a board of directors for the federal courts, decided in the spring to ensure that money was available for criminal trials because of constitutional imperatives such as the right to a speedy trial, Sellers said. About $5.5 million remains for federal criminal trial juries.

"If we funded them both at the same time, they'd both run out in early August, and the Judicial Conference wasn't willing to take that chance," Sellers said.

As for civil trials, most federal courts are delaying the start of new ones that require juries until the money becomes available, although a handful are asking jurors to serve now and receive back pay later, he said.

By law, federal jurors receive $40 a day in pay, plus expenses like parking and lunch, working out to an average of $50 a day.

The empty till for court-appointed attorneys has not yet affected any trials, possibly because the lawyers generally wait several weeks to submit their bills and some are likely to agree to receive back pay later to keep on working now, Sellers said.

Saba won't force taxes

THE BOTTOM, Saba (AP) - Despite its serious financial woes, the government of Saba said it will not force residents to pay money owed in property assessments.

Residents complained that they received unusually high property assessments along with threats of liens on their homes.

"There is a need for us to become more tax conscious but in a moderate and civilized way," said Commissioner of Finance Roy Smith on Sunday. "They will be paying taxes but in a manner that they can feel easy with," he said.

He said the Central Government's tax department failed in the past to accurately figure property assessments.

Jobs look bleak for graduating seniors

By JEANNE FRASER BROOKS
Avis Staff Writer

St. Croix graduated about 600 high school seniors this month. While some will be going on to college or some other post-secondary training, many won't be. What lies in store for them?

"Very little" seems to be the answer from most quarters.

The Virgin Islands Legislature recently announced that "given the economical [sic] climate on St. Croix and how this affected businesses that have sponsored students in the past...only 100 [of 700] applicants" will find a job through the Summer Youth Program.

Six hundred hopeful students will be turned away.

Summer, a historically slow time in the Virgin Islands, also means the traditional openings in fast food restaurants, hotels, and other tourist-oriented businesses are unavailable to Virgin Islands students.

Go-fer, apprentice, trainee, no-skill or low-skill jobs are also closed to students looking for summer work. Adults already fill those positions hoping to move up as the economy improves and expands.

Central High School's Acting Principal, Kent Moorehead, is taking a hard look at Central's curriculum with an eye to making some changes.

"What are we offering? What are the needs of local businesses?

What do businesses want?" are the questions Moorehead is asking himself, the CHS faculty, and the business community.

"We need to involve the community in the education process," said Moorehead.

"Teachers think their role is just to teach. Parents think it's enough to get a child dressed and out the door in time for school. And businesses wait for the final product before offering employment.

"The process of education is a community process, not just a Department of Education process," Moorehead said.

"Education must be designed to meet the needs of the community. Right now we're training our students to leave the Virgin Islands."

Moorehead is referring to the heavy emphasis presently being placed on high-technology skills rather than on day-to-day needs skills, i.e. plumbing, electrical, carpentry, air-conditioning, mechanical.

Central currently offers a very limited on-the-job program for some of its students.

"VIALCO, WAPA, and several smaller businesses work with us to teach and mentor some of our students in the practical skills they need in order to survive in the world of work," said Moorehead.

The unspoken words in Moorehead's discussion of the OJT program were that more such involvement from the business community is needed.

For most of the recent graduates there is little to keep them home.

For most, if they want to work, they will be forced to look elsewhere.

Rotary West swipes clean-up award

By NICOLE FREYDBERG

Rotary Club St. Croix West recently received the Regional Director's Take Pride in America Award for two day-long clean-ups of the Sandy Point National Wildlife Refuge.

The club represented the only civic organization in the Caribbean and the South West United States to receive award, Rotarian Susann Larsen said.

Rotary West adopted the refuge as part of its pledge to "preserve planet earth," she said.

Twenty-eight Rotarians spent a total of 200 hours collecting litter and debris from the park last fall, filling up 11 dump truck loads of garbage.

"Without on-site management since its establishment in 1984, Sandy Point National Wildlife Refuge fell into a sad state of disrepair and neglect," previous U.S. Fish and Wildlife representative Greg Hughes said.

"Rotary West realized that massive cleanup was needed to reverse this terrible trend and that with individual, group and corporate participation they could... restore its natural beauty."

The cleanup eliminated debris which endangered nesting leatherback sea turtles and other wildlife, he said.

Out of 99 species of birds on Sandy Point, 21 are endangered, Environmental Association member Olassee Davis said. Several of the 225 plants on the refuge are also endangered, he added.

Rotarians adopted the refuge with fond memories of their childhoods on Sandy Point, Hughes said.

"They realize that the only way to save these magnificent cultural and natural resources, in a meaningful way, was for their children to see it as they had," he said.

Restaurants creative for slow summers

By PATRICK ROGERS
Avis Staff Writer

Summer on St. Croix- It's hot, tourists are scarce and many locals go on vacation.

So what's a restaurateur or hotelier to do?

If you're Debbie Wahl; you open a restaurant serving nouvelle cuisine.

Wahl, whose Le Petit Gourmet restaurant opened this month in Christiansted, said one reason she's opening during the traditionally slow summer season, is so she and her staff will be ready for the busy winter season.

"By then we will have everything ready and we will know what works and what doesn't. I was a little bit afraid to open in the summer though," Wahl said.

"You have to choose the right place and offer the right menu. But I think every restaurant and every shop that opens on St. Croix will be good for St. Croix and make it that much more of an appealing destination," she said.

If you're Dave Kendrick of Kendrick's in Christiansted, you shut down for a week and reopen with a summer menu offering lighter food and a new look for your restaurant.

> 'We've changed all the dining rooms and the rooms will all have different themes.'
>
> Dave Kendrick

"We've changed all the dining rooms and the rooms will all have different themes," Kendrick said.

Restaurants, like other businesses, have to respond to the changing needs of their customers.

"Any restaurant has to change every three years or so, no matter how good the food is," Kendrick said.

If you're like many other restaurants, like Dino's in Christiansted, you close down for a month or two.

But this summer won't be as slow as past summers, according to St. Croix Hotel and Tourism Association president Betty Sperber.

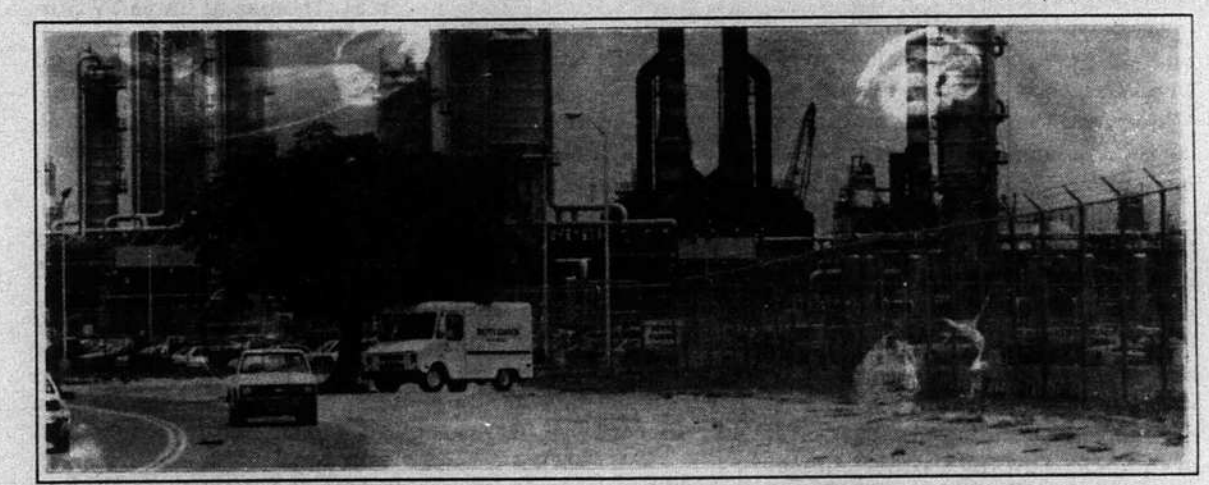

"St. Croix is very hot right now as a destination. We're really doing well, we've had five very good months in a row following two really rough years," Sperber said.

April was a record month for tourism, and May occupancy jumped from 47 to 70 percent over last May.

Sperber credits the increase to a joint effort between the private and public sectors.

"We worked so closely together. We travelled to trade shows, produced brochures together, just a lot of hard work," she said.

HESS- Despite rumors of layoffs and racial tensions, Hess continues to move towards completion of the billion-dollar catcracker unit. It is expected to increase profits for the refinery and is scheduled for completion this fall.

EDITORIAL:

Tax increase - myth over spending cuts

NEW YORK (AP) - The idea of a tax increase has been accepted by so many individuals, legislators, economists, business people and others that a significant, critical question has almost faded into oblivion.

It is: Why? Why does the country need a tax increase?

The response offered most often is the political catch-all "in order to correct the budget deficit," followed by the equally automatic defense that "we need to get the economy moving again."

Since documentation is extensive showing tax increases have seldom if ever reduced budget deficits, especially in the past 30 years, and since it can be proven that tax increases slow economic growth, such answers are suspect.

Another category of responses may be closer to the answer, one led by the explanation that the president says it is necessary, wants it badly and must get his way, at least in part. The rationale is "we can't deny him entirely."

Various other defenses are offered with diminishing effectiveness, the least credible being that intelligent people, such as legislators and Cabinet officials, say the economy needs a boost, and they can hardly be wrong.

Whatever the explanation, a sense of inevitability now seems to be a factor in thinking. Momentum builds and sweeps aside rational questions and contrary evidence, such as these offered by Daniel Mitchell of the Heritage Foundation, a conservative think tank.

1. Higher taxes punish productive economic activity. High taxes depress incentives to work, save and invest. Documentation of these assertions is substantial.

2. Higher tax rates tend to mean lower tax revenues. People look for ways to shelter their income from taxes. They also tend to spend less, which means business profits decline and companies pay less in taxes.

3. Higher rates lead to more spending and bigger deficits. For every 1 that tax revenues grew in the 1970s, federal spending rose by $1.22. In the 1980s, the ratio rose to $1.29. Source: Office of Management and Budget.

4. Higher rates may reduce job creation. Almost all jobs ultimately depend on the amount of savings and investment. Since high tax rates penalize savings and investment, high tax rates tend to undermine job creation.

5. Higher taxes hurt small business. Approximately 80 percent of U.S. businesses, including proprietorships and partnerships, pay taxes through the personal income tax code. They have less left to create jobs.

6. Higher taxes are likely to reduce U.S. competitiveness.

This is only a part of Mitchell's list, and his is one of dozens of prepared by academics and legislators that lead to the conclusion that waste reduction might be a happier way to cut the deficit.

"Might" is a mighty word in this regard, because waste-reduction means cuts in the bureaucracy.

Prior, feeble attempts to cut the bureaucracy, with loss of jobs, have led to outrage, demonstrations and political threats.

Finding and trimming waste have both been well studied.

Letters to the editor:

Outcry grows over alleged child abuser

Dear editor:

The Women's Coalition has noted the public outcry concerning the re-re-re-release of Miguel Lebron, an alleged child abuser, into the community. Mr. Lebron apparently cannot set limits on his behavior, whether it is complying with the conditions of his pre-trial release so as not to be jailed until trial, or caring for his child in a manner which will not endanger her life.

Mr. Lebron is accused of a very serious, violent crime against the most defenseless segment of our society - against his own child. And because he chose to ignore the conditions of his pre-trial release on several occasions, we believe Mr. Lebron surrendered his right to freely associate in our community while his child suffers in a hospital; suffers the pain that only a burn victim can know.

Many people in our community are outraged at this injustice. Like those who wrote the letters to the editor, we all have the right to make our voices heard. If you feel strongly about this issue, write letters to the editor, write directly to Judge Resnick at District Court, or simply cut this letter out and send it to him. This is our community, and the only way we can affect change is to make our opinions known.

IRB needs competent staff

Dear editor:

On Tuesday, June 15, during one of our many power outages, I stopped in to the St. Croix Internal Revenue Bureau to pay some taxes. What happened then was a joke. If you haven't heard a good one lately, let me relate it to you:

Q: How many IRB employees does it take to hand stamp a receipt of tax payment?

A: I don't know; how many?

Q: Only one, but it takes half an hour to locate the one employee who knows how to do it while the power is out.

It seemed that without power the cashier was unable to use the collection stamp, which (for those of you who may not know) is a manual push-down stamper.

I'm still trying to figure out why electricity would be required for this task! I even offered to do it for her, so maybe she could learn how for the next time we are without power!

If the IRB employees don't want to help taxpayers, who (1) pay their salary and (2) keep cash flowing in to this government which is said to be in dire financial straits, then perhaps they should just close down the office and go home, rather than leave us standing around while deciding whether or not they can use a manual piece of equipment during a power outage.

Better yet, the IRB should find some competent people who need and want a job, and are willing to help us, their employers.

An insult to Caribbean women

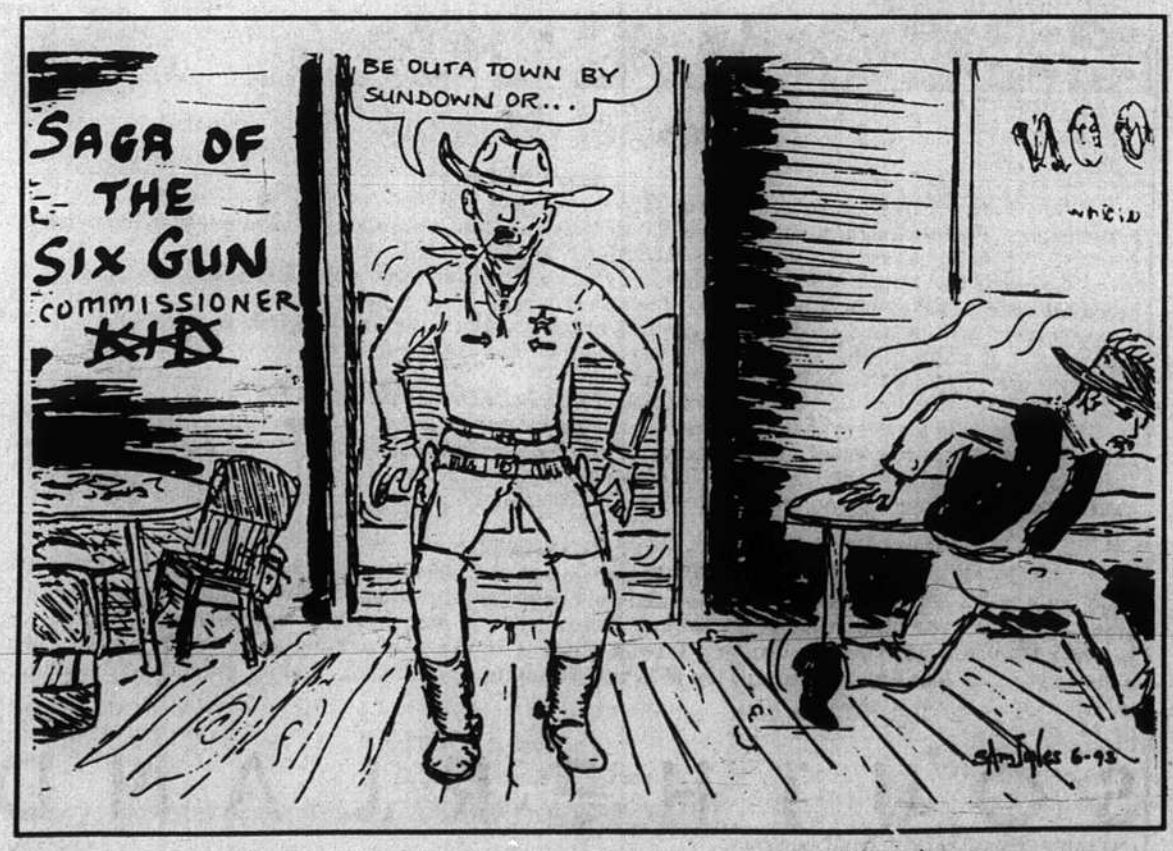

Dear editor:

What is a Caribbean Woman? The first things that comes to mind is a woman of color born and raised on one of the Caribbean Islands. I was appalled when I attended the taping of the Dianna Wright Show done here on St. Thomas at Cable TV Studios.

The topic of discussion Caribbean women. On the guest panel were Commissioner Juel T. R. Malloy, Beatrice George, First lady Joan Harrigan Farrelly, Toya Andrews and Dr. Ann Barnard. The Virgin Islands has many native women, of whom we are proud, extremely proud.

BY MARIANNE MEANS

Washington - As if President Clinton didn';t have enough troubles, now comes the unkindest cut of all: Roughly half of all Americans consider him a liberal.

The president, remembering how George Bush managed to make "liberal" a dirty word during the 1988 campaign, has been trying his darndest to dance away from that label. He has not succeeded, in part because he actually is liberal on many issues, although not all.

This is not necessarily a bad thing, considering the hash the conservatives made of the country the past decade.

But liberalism has fallen from public favor. The Republicans have done a good job of inaccurately tagging it as a philosophy of "tax and spend" that promotes radical ideas and fringe causes.

Rather than wade into ideological battle, Clinton originally portrayed himself as a "new Democrat" centered somewhere between the philosophical poles and concerned primarily with reactivating government to be more responsive to public needs.

But he kept getting sidetracked. Gays in the military, for instance, turned out to be a zippier issue than economics, a subject most people find hard to understand anyway.

And voters were loathe to change old habits of assigning politicians to slots on the right or the left rather than bothering to distinguish among shades of gray in the complicated middle.

A New York Times/ CBS Newspoll shows that 49 percent of those surveyed now say Clinton is a liberal, 31 percent say he is a moderate, and 11 percent think he's conservative. This represents a sizable shift in public perception. Last September, during the campaign, only 38 percent thought he was liberal and 37 percent said he was a moderate.

Just to be sure no one missed this development, The New York Times led the paper with the survey story.

It tends to confirm that Clinton's advisers have been on the right track in urging him to reclaim the centrist image of his campaign. He is supposed to do this by talking more about deficit reduction and less about taxes, downplaying civil rights issues, stressing policies that help the middle class, pushing for welfare reform and touting mainstream cultural values.

Depending upon Clinton's skill, it could represent a sensible shift of emphasis. But his first ventures with these new themes were awkward. He said, for instance, that he favors "not entitlement, not abandonment, but empowerment," thereby lowering his rhetoric to the level of meaningless mush.

His presidency hangs, however, less upon an ideological label but upon passage, in a recognizable form, of his economic package as well as progress toward health care reform.

Clinton's administration will be judged by those two things, not by his ideology. If he is thwarted early in his promised reordering of national priorities, he will be just another status-quo president. And we know what to do with them.

The bargaining in the Senate over the economic measure is well underway and what will emerge is something different than what went in. But the president can still claim victory if despite the changes the bill retains his basic principles of restoring tax progressiveness, stressing job training and education and reducing the deficit.

Clinton is already going along with reductions in his tax proposals and deeper spending cuts than he had intended. This is no time to fret over details.

The economic package and the health reforms yet to come could determine whether his presidency is a brief aberration in a continuing conservative tide or the true beginning of a new and different era.

And there are signs all about that the conservative message is very much alive and well.

Texas just sent to the Senate a conservative Republican, Kay Bailey Hutchison who was elected on the familiar platform of cutting government spending and holding down taxes. Her election means Clinton now has one less vote for his economic program.

In Virginia, Republicans just picked a right-wing gubernatorial slate backed by anti-abortion advocates, gun control opponents and Christian activists. Moderate candidates who contended they could appeal to independents and even Democrats were soundly defeated.

Virginia, one of only two states with a gubernatorial election this year, offers conservative Republicans a good opportunity to send an ominous signal to the White House. Republicans also have high hopes in the other state, New Jersey, where Democratic Gov Jim Florio suffers from lingering resentment over a tax hike he pushed through early in his administration.

VIEWPOINT

Threatened by deer

BY CALVIN TRILLIN

This week, we bought something called a deer whistle to keep deer from running in front of our car. We also bought some Ivory soap to keep deer from eating our flowers. I guess you could say that we're being threatened by deer on a number of fronts.

We don't know if Ivory soap actually does keep deer away from flowers. Why would it? I used to have a dog that ran away when he smelled soap, because he hated to be given a bath, but he certainly couldn't distinguish between brands of soap.

Also, I can't imagine that anyone in our area has been going out in the woods and irritating deer by sneaking up on them and giving them a bath. We've got some odd types around here, but not that odd.

Could it have something to do with the fact that Ivory soap floats? But how would the deer know that it floats. I can't picture a deer backing off a begonia, and explaining to the deer next to him, "I don't exactly know why, but there's something about being near floatable soap that just gives me the willies."

Also, how would anybody have found out that Ivory soap is a deer repellant? It's hard to imagine the way any of these discoveries of common household animal-repellants came about. I heard on the radio, for instance, that geese will avoid any place that smells like grape chewing gum.

I guess somebody started out trying to find out the effectiveness of Chiclets as a geese repellant - this would be some guy who just got into the habit of using Chiclets for any number of little chores around the house - and then, when that didn't seem to work, just kept going, chewing gum after chewing gum.

The deer whistle - which consists of two little black plastic gizmos that you stick on your front bumper - is, according to its manufacturer, 80 percent effective.

But we have no way of knowing if it's working or if we simply haven't encountered any deer. In the first place, according to the instructions, the whistle doesn't kick in until the car is going 30 miles an hour, so to see if it's whistling someone would have to run in front of the car at 30 miles an hour.

Frankly, this sounds dangerous, and when I discussed the possibility of a test with my wife, she said that she wasn't willing to try it.

Also, as it turns out, she wouldn't have been able to hear the noise anyway. The noise the whistle makes, according to the directions, is at 16,000 to 20,000 hertz (cycles per second), a pitch that can only be heard by an elk or a wildbeest or a camel. But the noise can't be heard by a human being - particularly a human being who is running 30 miles an hour, and puffing like crazy.

In other words, we pretty much have to take the manufacturer's word for it that the deer whistle is making any noise at all.

All we can get is a negative proof - say, a 300-pound buck comes barrelling over the hood. Even then, of course, we might have been going only 27 or 28 miles an hour. Or this is the other 20 percent.

I have to say that one sentence in the instructions makes me suspicious. It says upon my oath), "Don't expect deer to tap dance or stampede when you approach." Nobody ever expected a deer to tap dance. That's like saying, "Don't expect a camel to dart out in front of your car." We never did. We have enough trouble as it is.

At least the deer whistle doesn't look obtrusive. I can't say the same for the Ivory soap.

My wife says the point of having an aesthetically pleasing flower garden is negated by sticking clunky bars of Ivory soap all over it.

She didn't like the suggestion I offered: we carve each bar of ivory soap into the shape of a flower blossom, paint it, stick on the sort of stake you use to hold up roses, and tell everyone that it's an usual strain of marigold.

Also, she wasn't so sure she wanted soapy water in her garden after a rain.

The mention of soapy water reminded me of stopped-up drains. I fear stopped-up drains much more than I fear the thought of a deer running out in front of the car.

At this point, we're thinking of putting the deer whistle in the garden. It doesn't make any noise unless the garden's going 30 miles an hour, of course, but the deer have no way of knowing that.

A dream come true
Student designs clothes

By JEANNE FRASER BROOKS
Avis Staff Writer

Money, while important, isn't always the reason why some teens take a job.

For Cherifa Jules of I.M. Hodge Pavillion in Frederiksted, working with a clothes designer is almost too good to be true.

"I come here after school.

Not every day, just two or three," said Jules in the design studio of Ira Claxton.

Claxton and his sister, Lonette Bertrand, own MTK, Inc. in the Barren Spot Shopping Center. He designs, she sews the finished product.

It was Ruth Rhea, Home Economics teacher at Arthur A. Richards Junior High School, who brought Claxton and Jules together.

"I saw the work [designs] Cherifa was doing and the feel she had for line and proportion. I thought she'd benefit from working with someone who was already in the business," said Rhea.

"I called Ira, introduced them to each other, and they did the rest."

The match was made in February as Cherifa started the second term in the eighth grade at Arthur A. Richards.

Claxton, noting her neat stitching, started her off doing hand-stitched hems on some of his simpler garments.

She's also learning how to cut and alter patterns.

The new sewing machines, a far cry from the treadle machines used by our mothers and grandmothers, can be intimidating. Jules is mastering the hemmer and will eventually learn the intricacies of the serger or overlock machine.

"I want her to practice with all the equipment," said Claxton, "so she will become accustomed to using it.

I tell her, 'learn as much as you can about your tools so you can use them well.'"

Jules hasn't done much sewing so far, preferring to design instead. That may change, however, since her mentor believes a designer should know how to use fabric well in order to design well.

After a summer in Dominica, Jules plans to return to Arthur A. Richards for her final year in junior high, and to MTK where she will continue the practical education she hopes will lead to fashion design school after she finishes high school.

Clothes designer, Ira Claxton, shows his young pupil, Cherifa Jules, how he put together the jacket of a mini-skirted suit worn by a beauty pageant contestant in the British Virgin Islands.

Scotland Yard probe ends abruptly in Trinidad

By LINDSAY MACKOON
Avis Correspondent

PORT OF SPAIN - Investigations by a five-man Scotland Yard team into drug related matters and alleged corruption in the local police force have ended, with reports of some drug cartel connections, but many false leads, Minister of National Security Russell Huggins said Monday.

The British officials, who have been in the Caribbean state for the past 11 months, have been given two months to submit their final report, Huggins told a news conference.

According to the minister, the decision to end the investigation was taken last week by Cabinet after prolonged discussions with Graham Seaby, head of the team.

"The government felt the Scotland Yard team had accomplished all it could and nothing more tangible could have been achieved," he said. The British officials are due to fly out to London on Friday, Huggins said. They were sent to Trinidad to probe allegations by a senior official - assistant police commissioner Rodwell Murray - that there was a drug cartel working inside the 5,000-strong police force.

Summer jobs wanted

Teens flock to ads in search of positions

By JEANNE FRASER BROOKS
Avis Staff Writer

"Wanted: Teens for summer jobs. Ages 16-18. Must like sales, be friendly. Be aggressive. And must like going out. Tel. 773-1171 for more information."

More than 200 teens, preteens, and young adults responded to the ad.

"I was overwhelmed," said Palmira Thurland, better known as artist "Mera T." "I received calls from children of 10 and young people in their early 20's."

Two high school girls, one a 1993 Central High graduate and the other about to enter her senior year, said they responded to the ad because they wanted "to do something about the future. I want to plan now."

Thurland placed the ad because she wanted to expand her hand-painted clothing business.

"I was looking for 10 sales representatives. I had no idea, none, that I'd get this kind of response." said Thurland.

Because the teens had answered an ad looking for a sales person Thurland decided to sponsor a mini-workshop which would highlight her business, and give the teens an opportunity to start their own small businesses.

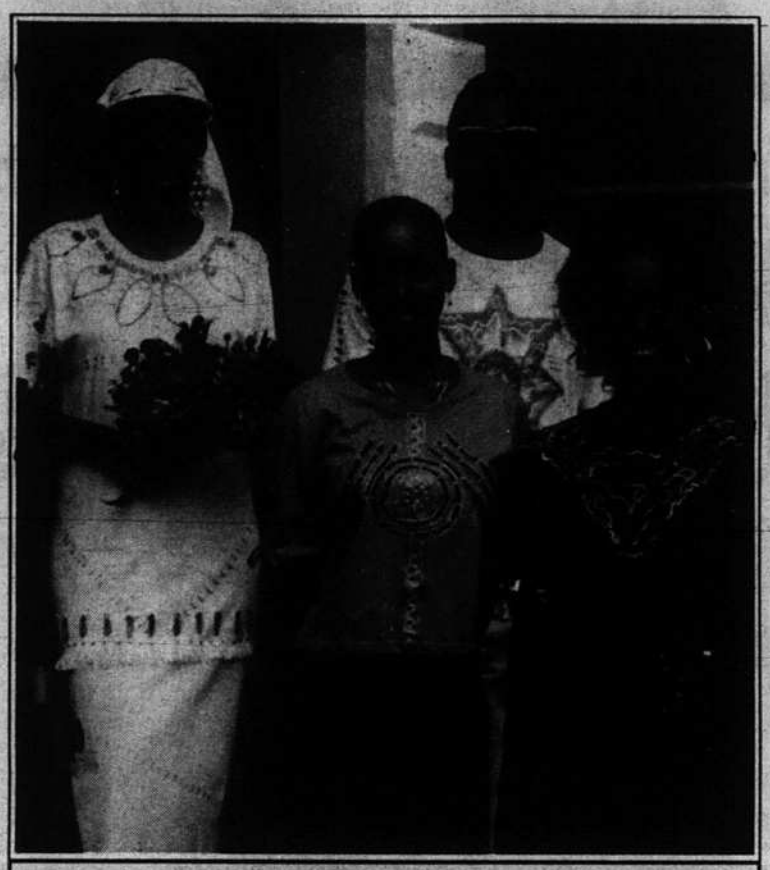

In a driving rain Saturday afternoon, more than 50 of the hopeful teens attended the workshop in Frederiksted.

One 17-year-old male went because he wanted "to find out about starting my own business." He had already had some experience in owning a business.

"I used to build boxes for stereo speakers and finish them however the customer wanted."

Another, a recent Central High School graduate, was there to learn what he had to do to start an electronics business.

Cyndee's Models, one of St. Croix's many small businesses, showcased Mera T. fashions made from t-shirts. As in many fashion shows, the grand finale was a wedding dress which had been made from t-shirts and hand-painted in gold.

Four of Cyndee's Models stand in the doorway of St. Gerald's Hall, Frederiksted, where they modeled t-shirt fashions made by Mera T. during a mini-workshop for aspiring teen entrepreneurs.

Following the fashion presentation, Carl Christensen of the Small Business Administration and Christine Cintron from Farmers Home Administration spoke briefly to the young people about the programs each agency offers to help people start a business.

"We have money available to make loans to you of between $500 and $5,000, if you are between the ages of 10 and 20," Cintron told the audience of mostly 16 to 18 year olds.

Clinton, talk-show guest for six stations, defends budget

Plan includes cuts, taxing rich

WASHINGTON (AP) - Trying to outmaneuver foes of his budget plan, President Clinton sat down at a desk and microphone in the Roosevelt Room and offered himself up as a talk-show guest Monday on radio stations across America.

In six separate broadcasts heard from New York to Los Angeles, the president argued that his plan is fair and balanced, that it includes $250 billion in budget cuts and that most of the tax increases he proposes will be absorbed by Americans with incomes above $100,000.

"There's been so much rhetoric around this economic program and so much inaccurate information put out there that it's not going to be easy to get the senators to make the tough choices to pass the bill," the president said.

The interviews were intended to counter a Republican offensive attacking Clinton's program as simply another Democratic tax-and-spend plan.

The White House worries that Republicans have been successful in characterizing Clinton's program on their terms, throwing Democrats on the defensive.

Even so, the Senate is expected to approve the plan this week.

In three of the six interviews, Clinton took a slap at an unrelenting critic, Sen. Phil Gramm, R-Texas.

Clinton noted that he supports the space station and the super collider, two projects important to Texas' economy, and pointedly said, "Sen. Gramm may need me this week because I agree with him on this issue."

Speaking of Republicans in general, Clinton said, "That's the same crowd that presided over the last 12 years where we went from a $1 trillion to a $4 trillion debt, increased the national deficit every year and reduced our investment in the future. ... And I don't see how they have any credibility on this."

Clinton rejected GOP declarations that the defeat of Texas Democratic Senator Bob Krueger was a referendum on the administration's economic plan. "Our side was not, in effect, defended in Texas," Clinton said since Krueger had opposed his plan.

Clinton was doggedly optimistic about getting his programs approved.

One week after decrying gridlock and greed, Clinton said, "I think the era of gridlock and greed is fading into the distance and I'll be surprised if we don't adopt the economic program and a lot of other things that need to be done around this town like political reform, lobbying reform, campaign finance reform, national service. I think we'll get health care reform."

The president was interviewed by stations in Dallas, Detroit, Los Angeles, New York and Washington, as well as by broadcaster Larry King.

On topics other than the budget, Clinton said:

-The collapse of Japanese Prime Minister Kiichi Miyazawa's government had complicated the dynamics of next month's seven-nation economic summit in Tokyo.

"It's going to be a challenge to get a lot done at this summit," Clinton said.

-He strongly favors statehood for the District of Columbia but wants to delay bringing it up in Congress until there is "a relatively calm atmosphere" where it can be seriously considered.

-He had reached out "a hand of understanding" to the Washington press corps to mend strained relations and create "an atmosphere of respect and greater trust."

-"It really bothers me" when presidential trips to New York cause massive traffic jams and police and firemen are deployed in force to protect him.

He said he's trying to minimize the disruptions by taking a helicopter into midtown rather than driving in a motorcade.

CAMPAIGN FOR BLOOD: Blacks urged to donate more

MOBILE, Ala. (AP) - Blacks are being urged to donate more blood in a trial campaign to fill constantly short supplies of blood types more common among blacks than whites.

The "For the Love of Us" campaign began during the weekend, sponsored by Fenwal Inc., a blood-bank equipment maker in Deerfield, Ill. Centered in Mobile, the $150,000 campaign will run throughout the Gulf Coast, from Mississippi to Pensacola, Fla., and move to Atlanta in August.

The campaign will be waged through direct mail, churches, community programs and news reports. If successful, it will expand to other urban centers around the country with large black populations, the sponsor said.

The campaign was conceived because demand for blood often exceeds the supply in major metropolitan areas with largely black populations, said Fenwal spokeswoman Karen Schuetz. She cited a survey that found 42 percent of whites have donated blood at least once compared with 34 percent of blacks.

Shortages of types O and B are routine in many places, as a result. Blood types, like eye and skin color, are inherited.

While the blood of blacks and whites alike fall into eight major blood types - O, A, B, AB and positive and negatives of each - the ratio in their respective populations isn't the same.

For instance, 20 percent of blacks and 11 percent of whites have type B; 49 percent of blacks and 45 percent of whites have type O.

These blood types are defined by the presence of specific antigens - proteins in the blood that can provoke immune system reactions. Other kinds of antigens determine an array of other lesser-known blood types, such as one called Duffy.

"Certain antigens are found almost exclusively in African-Americans and (others) exclusively in Caucasians," said Dr. Clive O. Callender, a surgeon who directs Howard University Hospital's organ transplant center. Hector Garcia, national director of donor services for the American Red Cross in Washington, said Monday he knew of no deaths resulting from a lack of a certain blood type. But proper match of blood antigens is required to prevent rejection in a transfusion, doctors say.

A similar problem with a paucity of black donors of organs for transplant was aided by getting the word out, Callendar said. Ten years ago, blacks were the source of about 2 percent of all donated organs. That figure rose to about 10 percent in 1991, according to the United Network for Organ Sharing.

Airlines cut fares, maybe to raise cash

NEW YORK (AP) - The nation's three largest airlines cut fares Monday by as much as 30 percent on certain domestic routes, matching a discount by financially troubled Northwest Airlines.

United, American and Delta cut their fares on the routes where they compete with the Minnesota-based airline, which reduced its prices Saturday. In Detroit and Minneapolis, where Northwest is dominant, the discounts are smaller - closer to 20 percent.

That good news for summer travelers reflects Northwest's desperate effort to raise money in case it has to file for bankruptcy.

"This is further evidence they are scrounging for all the cash flow they can get," said Phil Brannon, an analyst at the New York investment firm of Mabon Securities Corp.

Higher fares would help the airline's outlook, but the company needs lots of quick cash to pay its bills and provide a cushion if it does seek court protection from creditors while reorganizing its finances.

The Northwest ticket sale, its third since the spring, gives passengers until Friday to buy tickets for travel that must be completed by Sept. 15.

The discounts apply to tickets bought seven to 14 days in advance, depending on which days of the week the passenger flies.

United, American and Delta responded with the same deal.

Sources familiar with Northwest's plans have said it might file for bankruptcy by the middle of next week.

Aiming to quell customers' fears about any imminent bankruptcy, a recorded message for employees offers possible responses to passenger questions, stressing the airline is considering nothing that would disrupt flight schedules or cancel tickets bought in advance.

Northwest's candor about its financial travails is a sign that the possibility of bankruptcy has lost some of its stigma in recent years, particularly among big airlines that have sought that kind of refuge.

US can deport Haitians without hearing, Court rules

WASHINGTON (AP) - Refugees fleeing Haiti for the United States may be stopped at sea and returned home without asylum hearings, the Supreme Court ruled Monday, declaring itself unable to solve an undeniable "human crisis."

The 8-1 opinion dealt a blow to thousands willing to take a risky ocean passage in search of freedom and upheld a policy developed by the Bush administration and adopted by President Clinton.

"This case presents a painfully common situation in which desperate people, convinced that they can no longer remain in their homeland, take desperate measures to escape," Justice John Paul Stevens wrote for the court.

"Although the human crisis is compelling, there is no solution to be found in a judicial remedy," he wrote.

The Haitians' attorney, Yale law professor Harold Koh, said, "This is a sad day for every one of us whose ancestors first came here by boat. ... President Clinton should take no satisfaction in successfully defending George Bush's Haiti policy before the Bush Supreme Court."

However, Associate Attorney General Webster Hubbell said he was pleased by the court's decision.

The Immigration and Naturalization Service and other U.S. agencies will continue working "to ensure that interdicted boat migrants who fear political persecution will be afforded meaningful opportunity for refugee processing in Haiti," he said.

Thousands have fled the Caribbean nation in the past two years, many in unseaworthy boats that took them to their deaths, and the White House contends returning them is the best way to discourage such hazardous journeys.

Clinton had called the policy "cruel" and "illegal" when he was running for president but reconsidered after the election.

"The Clinton administration should keep its word," said Rolande Dorency, executive director of the Haitian Refugee Center in Miami. "It's not a secret to anybody that the Haitians have been persecuted at home." Stevens wrote in his majority opinion. "The wisdom of the policy choices made by Presidents Reagan, Bush and Clinton is not a matter for our consideration." In dissent, Justice Harry A. Blackmun wrote that the policy plainly violates federal law and an international treaty the United States joined in 1968.

Citing many countries' indifference to Jewish refugees during World War II, Blackmun said Haitians "demand only that the United States, land of refugees and guardian of freedom, cease forcibly driving them back to detention, abuse and death."

The Immigration and Naturalization Service said the ruling would have no effect on 158 Haitians infected with the AIDS-causing virus who had been held at the U.S. Navy base in Cuba. They were being flown to the United States after a federal judge ordered their release.

In other action Monday, the court:

-Agreed to decide in a Michigan case whether an employer that illegally fires someone may escape liability if he later discovers a lawful basis for firing that employee.

-Refused to reinstate a $148.8 million antitrust award once won by Brooke Group Ltd. against another cigarette manufacturer. The court ruled 6-3 that Brooke did not prove Brown & Williamson acted illegally in a price war over generic cigarettes.

-Left intact a ruling that limited to $1,250 the money awarded to a Florida woman who had $430,000 worth of jewelry stolen from an airport security checkpoint.

-Rejected a Connecticut man's free-speech challenge to a U.S. Postal Service ban on political campaigning from sidewalks outside post offices.

-Agreed to decide in a case involving singer-songwriter John Fogerty to decide when winning defendants in copyright cases may collect attorneys' fees from unsuccessful plaintiffs.

About 37,000 people fled Haiti in boats after their country's army overthrew President Jean-Bertrand Aristide in September 1991. The boat traffic virtually ended in May 1992 after the Bush administration began the repatriation policy.

Haitian cabbie murdered in NY

NEW YORK (AP) - While the New York City police investigated Monday the death of a taxi-cab driver from Haiti, prosecutors filed charges against another Caribbean immigrant, whose vehicle killed a 6-year-old boy.

Cilemon St. Louis, 51, was killed in the Crown Heights section of Brooklyn on Sunday morning.

St. Louis's body was found slumped by the driver's side of the vehicle.

Police said he was robbed of an undetermined amount of money and then killed by a shotgun blast to the right side of his chest.

St. Louis became the 21st cab driver killed in the city so far this year. Almost half of the victims came from Jamaica, Haiti, the Dominican Republic and Puerto Rico.

In the meantime, prosecutors in the Bronx District Attorney's office checked the background of Dallo Samata, a 25 year-old gypsy cab driver, who was arrested after his taxi hit and killed Darnell Lewis, 6, while the youngster was attempting to cross the street.

Police officials said Samata is probably from Haiti and that he did not have a valid state driver's license.

Darnell was on his way to a store to buy firecrackers, when he was hit by the car on Prospect Avenue on Saturday afternoon.

According to eyewitnesses, Samata left the scene of the accident after hitting the child.

Darnell was rushed to Lincoln Hospital, where he was pronounced dead.

Samato turned himself up to the police, saying that he left the scene of the accident because he was afraid of an angry crowd gathering nearby.

Cuban refugees captured

SANTO DOMINGO, Dominican Republic (AP) - The Dominican navy captured 78 Cuban refugees who, frustrated after months of waiting for U.S. visas, were attempting to sail illegally to the United States, authorities said Monday.

A Miami-based Cuban exile group had airlifted nearly all of the captured Cubans here in April from the Cayman Islands as part of a plan to get them to the United States.

The Cubans had been stranded earlier in the Caymans, where they had landed after sailing south from their economically embattled Communist homeland.

Most Cubans fleeing Fidel Castro's government head north to the United States, where nearly all are granted residency because of a Cold War-era act of Congress.

However, the Caymans and the Dominican Republic do not have such liberal immigration policies toward the Cubans.

The Cubans were captured Sunday on a beach on the eastern Samana peninsula, 150 miles (243 kms) northwest of Santo Domingo, the capital.

They were transported Monday to navy headquarters in the capital.

Nearly all of them had first been in the Cayman Islands, said residents of a hotel in Santo Domingo where they had been living.

The Cubans are among many different nationalities who use this Caribbean nation as a gateway to the United States.

In recent weeks Yugoslavs and Chinese have also attempted to cross the treacherous 80-mile Mona Channel to Puerto Rico, as do thousands of Dominicans each year.

Scores of Cubans have sought asylum here in recent months, most from daily flights from Havana that stop in Santo Domingo.

Last HIV Haitians arrive in U.S.

MIAMI (AP) - The last group of Haitians infected with the AIDS virus arrived Monday in Miami from their detention camp at a U.S. military base in Cuba.

Their arrival coincided with a U.S. Supreme Court decision issued Monday that upheld the Clinton Administration's policy of intercepting and returning Haitian refugees without hearing their requests for political asylum.

Fourteen refugees arrived at Miami International Airport at 13:42 GMT on a C-130 transport plane after spending up to two years detained at the U.S. Navy Base at Guantanamo Bay.

All the Haitians were deemed to have credible fears of persecution in Haiti, but were denied entry into the United States to pursue claims of political asylum because many tested positive for HIV, which causes AIDS.

"The community relations service will continue to work with the refugees as part of their resettlement," said Ron Tomalis, spokesman for the Justice Department in Chevy Chase, Md. "But there are no more HIV positive Haitians in Cuba."

The group consisted of 11 men and 3 women. Six will resettle in Florida, seven in New York and one in Massachusetts and all are HIV positive, Tomalis said.

The group was the fourth to arrive within a week from the camp under a June 8 federal court order that ruled the compound at the Guantanamo Bay Naval Base was "an HIV prison camp," and had to be shut down.

On June 14, 27 Haitians arrived, followed by 46 on Thursday and 52 on Friday.

The Guantanamo camp was opened soon after Haitians began migrating in large numbers after the 1991 ouster of President Jean-Bertrand Aristide, Haiti's first democractically elected president.

Simplify the status elections for V.I. voters

Lee Let's Loose

Guest commentary by Sidney Lee

Recently, the question of the several proposed status elections has become quite prominent in the news.

There is a status commission and a full-fledged staff and hired specialists to presumably explain all the various degrees of status and the possible options under them.

The entire status discussion and argument, are to a larger extent, St. Thomas-driven; and functionaries at the St. Thomas college periodically talk on the subject.

I agree with Sen. Bent Lawaetz that the process is, in the main unnecessary and extravagant.

However, I think one referendum is of some use. We need a clear expression as to whether Virgin Islanders prefer independence or a continued with relationship the United States.

This is the prime question that should be answered decisively.

We only need that one referendum, perhaps, also including statehood as an option.

In this basic decision there is no need for expansive forums, hired experts, etc.

Proponents of independence can best argue their own case, likewise, proponents of continued relationship with the United States, i.e. status quo, or proponents of statehood either now or eventually, can best argue their own case.

This pro and con is well tested in American and Virgin Islands forums, and comes more to the point than a professor trying to explain all options.

There is a second planned referendum if enhanced status-quo wins in the first election. This second proposed election can well be eliminated; saving time -- energy and money.

In this second referendum, voter are asked to decide between commonwealth, unincorporated territory and compact of federal relations. These differences are very slight, and not worth trying to explain or force a choice between them.

The term commonwealth has been used in many ways and it can be a label for almost anything.

The folklore in Puerto Rico is that when Munoz Marin was asked to translate from Spanish "in association with the United States," the reply was "commonwealth," which term stuck.

Unincorporated territory is our present status, which is flexible.

If we want to remain associated with the United States we have to realize we have to adhere to the U.S. Constitution, and like all citizens of the U.S., obey the law of the land as passed by Congress and signed into law by the president.

Our current status has our foreign affairs and defense in the hands of the United States, and we are subject to the draft.

Our governor and legislature have broad powers equal to most states, and are elected here by our rules.

We also have the great advantage of retaining the so-called federal income tax for use in the Virgin Islands.

This gives us the right to rebate tax benefits as an inducement for business.

The federal government pays for the so-called District Court system and also gives us tax rebates on rum, funds for roads, education, health, food stamps, etc., without any payment to the mother country.

It's hard to beat. In time, we will have our own constitution and a federal relations act. We had this privilege before, but couldn't agree here.

I suspect it will again take place.

NOT EVERY FATHER DESERVES A HAPPY FATHER'S DAY

Listed below are the names of fathers who are under a legal obligation to pay child support, and whose failure to make full and regular payments as ordered has resulted in the accumulation of substantial arrears. These same fathers, in many cases employed and able to meet other financial obligations, fail to make appropriate arrangements with the Territorial Court or the Child Support Division of the Virgin Islands Department of Justice to pay off the money they owe to their children. All have failed to make regular and full payments through the collections office as they were ordered to do. Meanwhile, their children go without the full support to which they are justly entitled. Does such a father deserve to celebrate a happy Father's Day? We, at the Virgin Islands Department of Justice, think not. Therefore, what follows is a list of persons whose child support arrearage is in excess of $5,000. Fathers, we hope that your names do not appear on this list next year.

SEVENTEEN TALK

Teenage crushes - should they be serious?

My best friend, Diane, and I both had a crush on this guy, Dave. She told me she heard he was planning to ask her out, so I figured he liked her and I even helped get them together. Then I started going out with Dave's best friend, Willie.

Well, last week, Dave calls me and tells me that he likes me! He said he only asked Diane out so he could try to get to know me without breaking her heart. I have a good relationship with Willie, but I'm still attracted to Dave and he and Diane are still going out. Should I tell her that he called me? How should I handle this?

I hate to say it, but Dave's behavior sounds a little suspicious to me: He asked out your friend so he could get to you without breaking her heart? Hmm. Dave's finding out the hard way that he'd have been much better off acting on his true feelings right from the start: If he liked you, he should have asked you out not Diane.

Either way, what Dave's doing now calling you behind Diane's back is unfair to her, to you, and to Willie. It's bound to do damage to your friendship with Diane, too. And if you play along by letting Dave call and tell you these things, you'll be just as guilty as he is. You really are in a tough spot what you need to do is figure out what you want and how you're going to organize your priorities. Then comes decision time. Whether or not you stay with Willie or drop him for Dave is something only you can decide. But realize that if you and Dave hook up at this point, you risk breaking two hearts Diane's and Willie's. Is it worth it?

I'm kind of a prep, and my new best friend, Pam, is kind of a rebel. She smokes, dresses totally wild, and couldn't care less about school. But we can talk about anything, and she always makes me laugh.

The thing is, my mom would kill me if she knew I was hanging out with someone like this. Lately, Pam's been hinting that she wants to come over. I'm running out of excuses! What should I do?

It's harsh when your parents don't approve of your friends just because of their appearance or habits especially when you can see past the superficial stuff to what's really important. But trying to hide Pam from your mother isn't a very good solution. If you stay friends, you're bound to have to bring Pam home sometime and the sooner you do it, the sooner you can stop worrying about it.

The key to making the introduction go smoothly is preparation. Warn Pam that smoking bothers your mom (and you, too - no?) and that she's sometimes quick to jump to conclusions about appearances. Then tell your mother exactly what Pam is like both the good and the bad. But make sure to stress the good. Explain why you like Pam, and let her know what a true friend she really is.

It's unfortunate, but lots of times parents react against friends who are different simply because they're scared that you'll be negatively influenced by them. If you let your mom know that you're not interested in smoking and blowing off school, she's less likely to be shocked or upset by Pam and more likely to try to overlook her appearance and see some of the great qualities you see.

The growth of a child - from birth to five years

Child development By Dr. Denise Bennerson

A person who is comfortable and knowledgeable about the growth and development of children usually feels competent working with young children.

Most people such as doctors, teachers, day care providers, and psychologists who work with children understand how children develop and the factors that contribute to their development.

Parents should also be aware of their child's development to help him or her grow and mature to their fullest potential.

This article will discuss some of the developmental milestones of a child from birth to five.

It will help parents and others to become more aware of what they should expect of a child as he or she develops.

A child develops basically in five areas: a) Motor Skills - Gross/Fine Motor, b) Communication Skills - Expressive/Receptive c) Cognitive, d) Self-Help and e) Social and Emotional Skills.

Motor skills are divided into two areas: fine motor and gross motor. Fine motor skills involve actions that use the small muscles of the body such as the hands and fingers. Gross motor skills involve actions that use large muscles of the body such as those of the arms and legs.

Communication skills are divided into two areas: expressive and receptive skills. Language is the major method of communication.

Expressive skills are what the child says and receptive skills is what the child understands.

Cognitive skills or intellectual development are the child's ability to gather and use information, or to learn.

Self-help are skills for basic living such as feeding, toileting, and dressing.

Social and emotional skills are the orderly growth of a child's sense of self and interactions with other people in the environment.

The development of a child is similar for all children.

However, some children may develop at differemt rates. We can observe if a child is developing normally by looking at the five areas of development and the skills of a child at a certain age.

The following ages and developmental milestones will help parents to observe the progress of their children.

By 12 months a child should:
-walk and drink with assistance
-drop and pick up their toys
-attempt to imitate sounds
-respond to NO
-hold out arms and legs while being dressed

By 24 months a child should:
-walk alone
-scribble
-have a vocabulary of 50 words
-explore to learn
-imitate adult behavior in play

By 36 months a child should:
-run well and kick a ball
-snip with scissors
-understand no, not, can't, and don't
-make negative statements
-use a spoon while still spilling a little

By 48 months a child should:
-copy a circle, imitate writing a plus sign
-carry out a series of two to four related directions
-speech is understandable to strangers, but there are still some sound errors
-use the toilet independently
-share toys with others

By 60 months a child should:
-print a few capital letters
-talk about causality and the content of a story
-lace shoes
-show interest in exploring sex differences
-draw a person with two to six recognizable body parts

Some children mature faster than others, while other children are slow to develop.

Parents who observe that their child is not developing normally according to their age may have a child who is developmentally delayed, and they should seek a second opinion.

Dr. Denise Bennerson is executive director of the Virgin Islands Institute of child Development.

Court deems Nigerian election void

ABUJA, Nigeria (AP) - A federal court on Monday said Nigeria's June 12 presidential elections were void, the latest twist in the country's troubled bid to end military dictatorship.

Chief Justice Dahiru Saleh of the Abuja High Court, which is second only to the national Supreme Court, said the elections were illegal because the National Electoral Commission had ignored a previous court ruling ordering that the election not take place.

The court, widely ridiculed in Nigeria, had granted a series of injunctions to a group of supporters of the military dictator, Gen. Ibrahim Babangida.

The group alleges that presidential campaigns were rigged and that Babangida must stay in power.

After the electoral commission ignored the order to scrap the election, the court subsequently ruled that the results be suppressed.

The electoral commission obeyed that order, even though other federal courts ordered that the results be released.

Electoral commission attorney Buhari Bello went to northern Kaduna High Court to file an appeal of the Abuja High Court order.

Moshood K.O. Abiola, who was leading the balloting when the results were suppressed, urged Nigerians to remain calm and promised he would not launch a "witchhunt" against the military if he is allowed to become president.

Both Abiola and his opponent, Bashir Othman Tofa, are friends of Babangida and were handpicked to be candidates by the military regime.

Critics say Banbangida is orchestrating the chaos in order to avoid giving up power as promised on Aug. 27.

"It's pretty obvious that his fellow Babangida doesn't want to go in August," said human rights leader Beko Ransome-Kuti.

Alaska sues animal activists

ANCHORAGE, Alaska (AP) - The state on Monday sued an animal-rights group whose ad in two national newspapers called for a tourism boycott until Alaska stops state-sanctioned wolf killing.

The Superior Court lawsuit against Friends of Animals seeks an injunction against use of the ad and unspecified monetary damages.

In addition, Gov. Walter J. Hickel and Attorney General Charlie Cole said that the state would file a mail fraud complaint with the U.S. Postal Service against the group because the ad asked readers to mail tax-deductible donations. State law bars fund-raising based on false claims.

Priscilla Feral, president of the Connecticut-based group, called the lawsuit a smokescreen.

"What they're trying to do is divert attention from the issue of wolf control," she said.

The ads, which ran in USA Today and The New York Times last week, read in part:

"If the state of Alaska would rather kill wolves than welcome visitors, tell Gov. Hickel that you'll be making tracks somewhere else."

The ad claimed hunters would be allowed to shoot wolves from the air and track wolves fitted with radio collars for research purposes.

The Department of Fish and Game originally sought a provision for aerial shooting, but earlier this month withdrew it. Instead its five-year wolf control plan calls for killing up to 150 gray wolves through extended hunting and trapping seasons, with airplanes used to find wolf packs. It also would not allow the hunting of wolves fitted with radio collars.

The plan is aimed at increasing moose and caribou populations in a 4,000-square-mile area south of Denali National Park.

Feral said the ad, which cost $15,000 to place, was accurate because it was based on the original proposal. She said she hadn't seen any official withdrawal of support for aerial shooting.

The department's revised plan is scheduled for consideration Saturday by the state Board of Game.

Friends of Animals was one of the environmental groups that started an Alaska tourism boycott earlier this year after the Board of Game in November approved aerial wolf shooting in two areas near Fairbanks.

Move over Batman; Jurassic Park hits big

But what's the hype about?

UNIVERSAL CITY, Calif. (AP) - Even before the movie had taken in its first dollar, the studio chairman was saying it would be the biggest of all time.

The expectation surrounding "Jurassic Park" hasn't been equaled since 1989's "Batman" debut. If the dinosaur movie isn't a $200 million box-office blockbuster, it will be called a failure.

A lot is riding on the $56 million film - from director Steven Spielberg's reputation to warehouses crammed with "Jurassic Park" trinkets such as walkie talkies, tattoos, cereals and even underwear.

Starring Sam Neill, Jeff Goldblum, Laura Dern and a host of giant reptiles, "Jurassic Park" opens nationwide Friday in 2,400 theaters. Several hundred theaters planned Thursday night showings as well.

Four of Spielberg's last five films have been underachievers - "The Color Purple," "Empire of the Sun," "Always" and last year's "Hook." His "Indiana Jones and the Last Crusade" grossed nearly $200 million.

Universal Pictures, the film's producer and distributor, is desperate for a hit. While "Dragon: The Bruce Lee Story" was a small success, the studio's bombs have been numerous, including "Cop and a Half," "Splitting Heirs," "CB4" and "Lorenzo's Oil."

Early reviews of "Jurassic Park" have been sharply mixed, and the film's Washington premiere Wednesday night wasn't overflowing with big-name stars.

Based on Michael Crichton's novel, the movie is set in a theme park inhabited by modern-age dinosaurs.

Eventually, the animals rampage, eating each other and a few park visitors unlucky enough to come across the behemoths at the wrong time.

The movie, advertised and merchandised for family audiences, is especially violent in places, and is rated PG-13.

Critics have said that in typical Spielberg style, the make-believe "Jurassic Park" special effects are much more impressive than the real-life actors. As in "Jaws" or "Raiders of the Lost Ark," story and plot are sacrificed for gee-whiz visuals and a booming score from John Williams.

Nevertheless, no one is projecting disappointing sales.

Sid Sheinberg, president of Universal's parent MCA Inc., has said "Jurassic Park" "will be the biggest picture of all time."

The current champion is 1982's "E.T. The Extra-Terrestrial," which brought in a staggering $399.8 million in ticket sales. Only two films in the last decade, "Home Alone" and "Batman," have earned more than $250 million, and none more than $300 million since 1977's "Star Wars."

The film's release is accompanied by a $65 million merchandising campaign.

Much of the "Jurassic Park" merchandise is aimed at young children. Items include toy weapons, pillow cases, pencil packs, plastic lunch kits, bubble bath, jawbreakers, "My First Sleeping Bag," coin purses, gummie dinosaurs, boys' underwear, party hats, cereals, walkie talkies, temporary tattoos and pajamas.

McDonald's Corp., whose tie-in to last year's "Batman Returns" drew criticism because of that film's violence, is promoting "Dino-Sized" meals and collector cups.

Universal Pictures and Spielberg's production company will enjoy a royalty based on sales, earning both millions more in income.

But this revenue is hard to track and isn't included in the box-office take.

AT SANDY POINT WILD LIFE REFUGE

U.S. wildlife, earth watch volunteers care for leatherbacks

By NICOLE FREYDBERG
Avis Staff Writer

By the time the group scrambled through the weeds and bushes lining the path to the beach, she had already begun digging, furiously slapping and shoveling the sand with her back flippers. The leatherback turtle dug for about 15 minutes, creating a hole about three feet deep before she began laying eggs. The slippery white eggs, about the size of billiard balls, seemed to spurt out easily in dozens at a time, and the Earth Watch volunteers continually caught them and passed them back assembly-line style, until the last volunteer placed them in a white plastic bag. The volunteers had to relocate the eggs to the sandy part of the beach, because the grassy part the turtle picked for nesting had eroded, and the eggs would be exposed to water.

Although about 42 endangered leatherback turtles have visited Sandy Point National Wildlife Refuge in Frederiksted this year, they face increasing erosion, pollution and distractions, Leatherback Turtle Research and Conservation Project Field Director and Principal Investigator Donna L. McDonald said.

The leatherback turtle visits 13 beaches in the world every year from March to July, laying between 70 to 100 eggs a night in 10 day intervals a season. But natural erosion has decreased the amount of sand, allowing the ocean to wash away the eggs after they are buried, she said.

"This is very critical because from about 10 to about 50 of the eggs don't have yolk in them," St. Croix Environmental Association member Olassee Davis said. "If the animals leave eggs close to the water in the grassy part, when the sand shifts, the eggs will get wet."

Last year, 21 nests were lost as a result of erosion, McDonald said.

The observation group, including Assistant Education Commissioner Rupert Ross and children and faculty from John H. Woodson Jr. High School, visited Sandy Point from about 8:30 p.m. to 11:30 p.m. Friday night. They ascended slowly upon the turtle, crouching down behind her and keeping voices to a whisper.

Too often, observers disturb the nesting turtles, forcing them back into the water, Davis said.

"When the animal comes on land, it needs peace and quiet to lay," he said. "If they see you, they're simply turning back and go into the water."

The U.S. Endangered Species Act of 1973 prohibits eating, buying and selling of meat and eggs. However, poachers disturb the turtles, taking their meat and eggs to sell for food, he said.

The hatchlings also face dangers, he said. Both wild horse and human beach traffic can disturb the nests. Garbage such as plastic bags appear to be jellyfish when they float on the water, killing turtles when ingested. Lights from the nearby ballpark distract the hatchlings, leading them toward the light and away from the sea to die in the sun.

In addition, crabs, herring and yellowbirds eat the hatchlings.

St. Croix Rotary West brings observation groups to Sandy Point to educate the local public about the importance of nature conservation, Rotarian Susann Larson said.

Increasing beach development also endangers the turtles because it encroaches on their nesting space, McDonald said.

Still, turtle AAR-76, tagged for research purposes, insisted on laying her eggs where she found suited. The turtle, about 3 feet long, groaned as she finished laying eggs, her watery eyes streaming with tears. Her charcoal gray shell toppled slightly above the hole, and the observers, who had been petting her wrinkled flippers and head, retreated to watch her camoflauge the beach.

After about 20 minutes, she began to collect sand behind her, tossing it back over the hole. She then flailed her two front flippers, disturbing the sand around her to disrupt any evidence of the nest. The sand flew up around her, entirely covering her back.

Turtle AAR-876 has already laid two nests on Sandy Point this month, McDonald said. McDonald and co-director Peter Dutton have began to use small magnetically coded microchips, injected into the shoulder muscle of the turtle, to identify and keep track of each turtle.

Haitian AID workers claim mass starvation with embargo

SAN JUAN, Puerto Rico (AP) - Hundreds of thousands of Haiti's poorest and youngest will likely lose their main source of food if a worldwide oil embargo on Haiti is applied this week and maintained, relief officials say.

"Kids who were getting one meal a day are not going to get even that," predicted Chris Conrad, director of CARE's Haitian operations - the humanitarian organization's biggest in the Western Hemisphere.

Although food is exempted from the U.N. embargo, "everything is related to gasoline, the cost of food, the access to food, everything," said Kim Johnston, manager of Latin American operations for the private humanitarian organization.

The relief group feeds about half of the 600,000 Haitians - slightly less than 10 percent of the nation's population - covered under a $60 million U.S. government nutritional program. Most are under 6 years of age, but the U.S. Agency for International Development program, which was being expanded, also includes handicapped, elderly, infirm and orphaned people as well as pregnant women and breast-feeding mothers.

Aid officials interviewed in the United States and Haiti agreed Friday that those fed now will be among the first hurt if the United Nations applies and enforces the oil cutoff.

The embargo will go into effect Wednesday unless Haiti's military rulers agree to the immediate reinstatement of President Jean-Bertrand Aristide's government. Soldiers overthrew Aristide in September 1991, killed hundreds of people in the following days and have withstood all previous international pressure to restore democracy.

The nation has about a month's worth of fuel reserves.

Catholic Relief Services, which feeds about 150,000 people in southern Haiti daily, is rushing to bolster its reserves of peas, wheat, corn and rice at its 300 feeding centers, said Mike McDonald, head of its Latin American-Caribbean operations.

The Catholic Relief Services chief in Haiti, Doug Greene, estimated that from one-half to 75 percent of all food aid deliveries are made by private truckers. If an embargo takes hold, "that private transport, depending on the supply of fuel, will shut down," he said.

Johnston, of CARE, agreed. "Our system is totally dependent on the trucks," she said, explaining that CARE food is delivered to Port-au-Prince, taken to warehouses to the western city of Gonaives, and then driven to hundreds of feeding centers in the parched, eroded northwest.

Greene was scrambling Friday to find more gas - and 55-gallon drums to store it - in the face of an army warning against hoarding.

Even with gas, perhaps from a special U.N. waiver, "it would be very difficult to get the fuel from the port to here given security concerns," Greene said from his Port-au-Prince office. "This is not a Mogadishu operation."

Other relief officials said U.N. guards would be needed to protect the trucks and warehouses from pirates.

If the embargo takes effect, "We would pretty much grind to a halt for the food program in a very short period," Greene said. The CARE officials echoed Greene, adding that the U.N. action comes as suffering has increased in the hemisphere's most impoverished nation.

CARE's program, intended to supplement other daily meals, has evolved over the past year into a primary feeding program, said the local director, Conrad, an American.

"I'm not an embargo-buster and I'm not a politician, but our constituency will be the first hurt," Conrad said. "They're already one foot over the edge and it doesn't take much to push them off completely."

'Ain't' nothing but a war on words

BOSTON (AP) - A war of words is brewing between the publishers of two popular dictionaries.

Houghton Mifflin Co., which puts out The American Heritage College Dictionary, accused Merriam-Webster's Collegiate Dictionary of "suggesting 'ain't' is OK."

Merriam-Webster said it ain't so.

In a news release this week, Houghton Mifflin challenged Merriam-Webster's "ain't" entry.

The Collegiate's 10th edition, released last month, has this to say of "Ain't":

"Although widely disapproved as non-standard and more common in the habitual speech of less educated, ain't ... is flourishing in American English. It is used in both speech and writing to catch attention and to gain emphasis."

The American Heritage College Dictionary Third Edition, to be released next month, labels "ain't" as "non-standard" - its strongest designation for an unacceptable word.

"Ain't has by now acquired such a stigma that it is beyond any possibility of rehabilitation," it said.

But it notes that educated speakers use the word "when they want to strike a jocular or popular note."

"I think there's less of a disagreement than meets the eye," said Frederick Mish, editor in chief of the Collegiate's 10th edition.

"Where there is a difference is in approach, I think ours is a superior approach."

A call from God

Missionary builds life in STX

By JEANNE FRASER BROOKS
Avis Staff Writer

"For God so loved the world..." Lillian Waters was only 14 when she knew she was destined to one day be a missionary. She met her destiny and on June 27 will celebrate her 25th anniversary as a missionary and founder of the Faith Tabernacle Full Gospel church on St. Croix.

"Quite simply, I received a call from God," said Waters.

But man stepped in when she was just a few years older. At 18 she married Paul Waters and settled down in the role of wife and, subsequently, mother to five children. The call was put on hold.

It wasn't until 17 years later that she would have her first look at the land and the people who would be the beneficiaries of her ministry.

After requesting and receiving permission from her husband to make the trip, as long as she took a companion with her, Waters accepted an invitation from her brother to visit him in the Virgin Islands.

St. Croix was a lush land of bush and plantations the first time Waters visited. Christiansted Town was the only area with electricity. West of Bassin Triangle there was only the stars to guide the evening traveler.

"My brother was stationed here as a Baptist missionary in 1955," said Waters. "His church was on the ground floor of what is now the Golden China Inn restaurant on King Cross Street in Christiansted.

"Annie de Chabert owned the building and offered it to my brother for his church. She lived upstairs."

Waters felt herself drawn to the island and its people. "They were so warm and welcoming. I felt at home and at peace."

As she was leaving the island, climbing the stairs of the little propellered airplane that would take her to Puerto Rico for the journey back to Georgia, she once again received a spirit message from the Lord: "You will come back and I will give you an inheritance of souls."

It was another seven years before Waters was able to return.

When she did, Annie de Chabert was there for her once more. "She provided me with a home and I went directly to the marketplace to minister."

There she met Pastor Stanley Mayhew who invited her to minister at his church, Mt. Calvary, in Watergut.

Starting in 1967, when God said, "'I want you to build a church for the people.'" Annie de Chabert stepped in and offered her space first at 40 King Street, then 13 East Street, and, finally, 16 East Street where the church now stands.

"This is a church truly built by the people. Volunteers came from our church in Duluth, Georgia, and worked with the people of St. Croix."

The church was dedicated in April 1976.

Faith Tabernacle Full Gospel Church Pastor Lillian Waters and her husband or 55 years, Paul Waters, in the sister church they founded in Duluth, Georgia.

Waters was eventually joined in her ministry by her husband, Paul. The couple received calls to minister from 37 states, Europe, Mexico, Canada, and 10 Caribbean islands.

"At first, people resented me for my role as a woman and a missionary, but my ministry is based on 'I love you just as you are,' so it didn't matter. No

Eye on the president

Clinton's wild family tree, discovered branches

WASHINGTON (AP) - President Clinton's family tree is more like a wild bush, with branches going every which way and some roots buried so deep they're lost.

His natural father died young and his mother married three other men, one of them twice. The family says he has six stepsiblings and at least one half-brother, fledgling singer Roger Clinton.

Now there's talk of an older half-brother he never knew about, a retired janitorial service owner who says he and the president had the same father. Although marriage and birth records support the claim of Henry Leon Ritzenthaler, some of the president's family don't think he's related.

Without confirming the report, Clinton said he tried to call Ritzenthaler, 55, on Monday. "I placed a call but there was nobody home. I don't think I should say anything until I've talked to him," Clinton told reporters.

Clinton's father, W.J. Blythe of Sherman, Texas, died in a traffic accident a few months before the future president was born. Blythe's widow, Virginia, moved to Hope, Ark., to live with her parents.

She gave birth there to William Jefferson Blythe in 1946 and married car dealer Roger Clinton in 1950, when Bill was 4.

The family later moved to Hot Springs, Ark., a raucous gambling town, and Virginia, an avid horse player, had her second son, Roger Clinton. Although only half-brothers, Virginia's two boys were close. Bill, who took his stepfather's name, is 46, Roger 35.

Roger spent a year in federal prison after pleading guilty in 1984 to distribution of cocaine and conspiracy to distribute it. As "older brother" moved into the White House, Roger's singing career improved.

Their mother divorced the elder Roger Clinton, an abusive alcoholic, then remarried him before he died of cancer in 1968.

He had had two children by a previous marriage, George Murphy and Roy Murphy, both of Hot Springs. The president is not close to either man, although he knows both politically, his mother says.

Virginia's third husband, Jeff Dwire, had two daughters, one of whom has been jailed on drug and burglary charges in Texas. Clinton had little contact with that daughter over the years, family friends say.

Virginia was married to hairdresser Dwire for six years before he died of complications from diabetes.

Her current husband, retired food broker Dick Kelley, has two children by a previous marriage. Dick Kelley Jr. works for a Little Rock engineering firm and Kathy Ferrar lives in Hot Springs.

Clinton was an adult by the time his mother married Dwire and Kelley.

On the Blythe side, Clinton's aunt, Ola Hall of Sherman, said last year that Clinton still "is a Blythe. He's our boy."

Several members of the Blythe clan in eastern Texas visited Clinton each year at Christmas, and they attended the inaugural ball this year. Dale Drake, a 78-year-old maternal cousin from Hope, Ark., said she and her family kept in touch with the Blythes, especially when Clinton was young. "I guess it is kind of unusual for him to have all these families, but I never thought of it like that because we've all been so close," she said.

Virginia's parents, Eldridge and Edith Cassidy, raised Clinton while his mother finished nursing school after Blythe's death.

Until recently, Clinton was thought to be Blythe's only child. But The Washington Post reported Sunday that records show he married Adele Gash Coffelt 11 years before Clinton's birth. The couple divorced a year later, then Ritzenthaler was born in 1938.

W.J. Blythe was listed on his birth certificate as the father.

Clinton's mother said Monday she did not know if the Ritzenthaler's claim was true. "I just don't know. He (Blythe) didn't say anything to me," said Mrs. Kelley, 70, in a telephone interview from her Hot Springs home.

However, Blythe's sister, Vera Ramey, told The Post that the father actually was a member of W.J.'s family, a married man whom she would not identify. She said Clinton's father accepted responsibility to avoid a family scandal.

Denying Ritzenthaler's claim, Mrs. Ramey, of Denison, Texas, told The Associated Press: "If they want to make a big deal out of it and bring charges, I will be there to testify. That's all I'm going to say."

Coffelt herself told The Post that Blythe fathered her son, Ritzenthaler. She said he also married her sister, Faye, after getting another woman pregnant.

Drake, whose father was the half-brother of Virginia's father, called the reports about Blythe "a bunch of you-know-what. Don't you quote me in the paper, but that's just how I feel about it."

Sexual child abuse prompts Pope to appoint committee

NEW YORK (AP) - Pope John Paul II has appointed a committee of Vatican and U.S. Catholic Church officials to study whether to make it easier to dismiss sexually abusive clergy from the priesthood.

The new committee, formed at the request of U.S. bishops, will look specifically at whether the church's 5-year statute of limitations on dismissals can be lifted in cases involving sexual abuse of minors, church officials said Monday.

The panel also will study whether the age when individuals are considered minors can be raised from 16 to 18 and whether abusive priests can be dismissed even if their actions resulted from mental illness, said Deacon Christopher Baumann, a spokesman for the U.S. Catholic Conference.

In a letter to U.S. bishops released Monday, the pontiff said he has become aware during the last few months how much U.S. Catholics are suffering because of clergy scandals.

"I fully share your sorrow and your concern, especially your concern for the victims so seriously hurt by these misdeeds," the pope said.

Leaders of the 55-million member Catholic Church in the United States, who have been buffeted by a series of reports of priestly pedophilia, last week established a committee of bishops to address the problem.

In personal meetings with the pope, many bishops have expressed particular concern about their ability under canon law to dismiss a priest whose moral and psychological condition precludes his return to ministry.

Archbishop William Keeler, president of the National Conference of Catholic Bishops, said Monday the pope "has taken to his own heart our concern for both the victims of abuse by priests and the priests who abuse. We join in his call for prayer, and we will indeed use the means at our disposal to reverse this scandal."

In his letter, the pope said every sinner who repents can call on God's mercy, but there also is the question of how humans respond to clergy sexual abuse.

"The canonical penalties which are provided for certain offenses and which give a social expression for the disapproval of evil are fully justified," the pope said. "These help to maintain a clear distinction between good and evil, and contribute to moral behavior as well as to creating a proper awareness of the gravity of the evil involved."

The pope said the committee he established will study how church law "can best be applied to the particular situation of the United States."

He wasn't specific, but U.S. church officials said the committee will study the statute of limitations for sexual misconduct and the age at which individuals are considered adults.

U.S. bishops also are concerned about a section of the code that considers the offending priest's mental fitness at the time of the misconduct a mitigating circumstance that could prevent dismissal, Baumann said.

There has been no systematic study of clergy sex abuse, but author Jason Berry says more than 400 Catholic priests in North America have been reported for molesting children since 1984. The Rev. Canice Connors, chairman of the church-sponsored panel, said from 2 percent to 4 percent of Catholic priests over the past 30 years may have been guilty of abuse.

Poor Taste in Church Contest Sets Woman's Teeth on Edge

By Abigail Van Buren

© 1993 Universal Press Syndicate

DEAR ABBY: I recently attended our annual mothers and daughters banquet at the church I've belonged to for more than 20 years. (I am 52 years old.)

First, they asked all the women who were mothers to stand up. Then they asked all the mothers who wore dentures to sit down. Then they kept eliminating mothers according to their ages ("All mothers under 30, 40, 50 years old," etc.). The last woman left standing got the prize for being the oldest mother present with her own teeth.

Abby, I have had dentures for a long time, but it was not something I cared to advertise. I spoke with several women who attended that banquet, and they all agreed that the teeth contest was in very poor taste.

I told the program chairman that I was offended by the teeth business, and she laughed and said. "Oh, everyone knew it was just a joke. Don't be so sensitive."

I will leave it to you — and your readers — if you want to print this. How do you feel about such a "joke"?

NO TOWN, PLEASE

DEAR NO TOWN: I agree with you. It wasn't a very good joke. It was insensitive, unkind, and an invasion of privacy. Readers?

* * *

DEAR ABBY: I am writing to ask how to obtain a passport or visa. What is the difference between them? How do you obtain them? I am planning a trip to the Philippines this summer and need this information, and I'm too embarrassed to ask anybody else.

JUST PLAIN BILL

DEAR BILL: A passport is proof of your citizenship and allows you to leave and re-enter your country. It also offers identification protection while you are in foreign countries. Your U.S. passport will allow you to leave the United States and travel, with the guarantee that you can re-enter the U.S.

According to the State Department's Office of Passport Services, Washington, D.C.: To obtain a passport, contact your local post office, courthouse or U.S. passport office. (A U.S. passport is valid for 10 years for adults.) You must fill out an application, provide proof of birth, pay a fee, and have passport photos taken. Allow four weeks to obtain a first-time passport.

A visa is stamped in your passport and allows you entry into a specific country. In your case, the Philippines does not require a visa for trips under 21 days.

BEACH HOME

The gentle Trade Breeze stirs the hammock. The smell of Jasmine and sea sounds echo off two foot thick local-stone walls. Your eye wanders over the acre-plus of flowers and fruit trees: Sour-sop, orange, tangerine, lime, lemon grass and flowering weeds. You have to get to them soon, but... A rum punch after the one minute walk up from the sand beach. Your beach on 100 feet of Caribbean Sea where hundreds of fish and sea fans await your calm snorkeling amazement in either shallow or deep water: Squirrelfish, High Hats, Sargeant Major, Butterfly...small colorful sea friends darting in and out their cave homes...you should be fixing the houses many cosmetic needs. And, although the guest house still needs a roof since "HUGO", the walls are in good shape... Yet, the sunsets are too incredible to miss, and then the moon and stars from the patio... during the day you can drift off in the hammock, snug and secure behind the encircling wrought iron.. take a warm, solar--heated shower... the hammock swings to the soft sounds of a happy, healthy neighborhood: Occasionally a dog and a rooster in the morning, in the evening the tree frogs. You begin to think: Maybe you should get out of this damn hammock and telephone DOUG MILLAR REAL ESTATE- 773–1360 & 778-0173 and tell him to raise the price from only $359,000!!!

ST. JOHN CHAPTER 10 verse 9
I am the door; by me if any man enter in, he shall be saved. And shall go in and out, and find pasture. The thief cometh not, but for to steal and to kill and to destroy; I am come that they might have life, and that they might have it more abundantly.

ST. LUKE CHAPTER 10
And the seventy returned again with joy, saying. Lord, even the devils are subject unto us through thy name. And he said unto them. I behold Satan as lighting fall from heaven. Behold i give unto you power to tread on serpents and scorpions, and over all the power of the enemy; and nothing shall by any means hurt you. Notwithstanding in this rejoice not, that the spirits are subject unto you; but rather rejoice, because your names are written in heaven.

Injuries don't keep teen from graduation

TILTON, N.H. (AP) - Tobias Wolfe wasn't about to let a broken back and 60 brand-new stitches in one arm stop him from receiving his high school diploma.

The 18-year-old from Sanbornton was taken by ambulance from Franklin Regional Hospital to Friday's commencement at Winnisquam Regional High School in Tilton.

His arm was slashed because he used it to shield himself. He also suffered two broken vertebrae.

"His arm hit the tailgate and his head hit the back of the tire," said Wolfe's sister, Rachel. "It cut all the way down to the bone."

After the ceremony, Tobias was taken back to the hospital.

Teen survives two days in car after wreck

EL CAJON, Calif. (AP) - An injured teen-ager survived two days in the dense underbrush of a remote canyon after a car she was driving crashed, killing her two passengers, officials said.

The car went into the canyon about 20 miles northeast of San Diego on Wednesday afternoon, California Highway Patrol dispatcher Helena Caravajel said. The accident wasn't noticed until Friday afternoon, when two telephone linemen heard 16-year-old Dawnya Skoglund calling for help.

"We heard some moaning. Someone cried for help in the canyon, and it was pretty faint at first. I thought it was an animal," said lineman Art Lowery.

Lowery said the high school student told him that she crawled on her stomach to a creek bed at the bottom of the canyon for water, but didn't have the strength to climb out of the canyon.

Caravajal said Skoglund told investigators that she became distracted when one of her passengers bumped the gearshift while adjusting the radio. The car went off the road, flying about 200 feet in the air before landing in the ravine.

Skoglund was in stable condition at Sharp Memorial Hospital with back injuries, hospital spokesman Todd Hoff said Saturday.

Killed were Willyn Maye Stewart, 17, who was pinned inside the car, and Timothy Doyle, 16, who was thrown from it.

GED program available

The Department of Education State Office of Vocational-Technical & Adult Education invites community residents who do not have a high school diploma or secondary certificate to participate in the GED Exam Program.

The five tests in the GED battery (writing skills, social studies, science, literature and the arts, and mathematics) are designed to measure the major concepts and skills associated with a traditional high school education.

Applicants for the program must meet the following requirements:

1. Must be 17 years of age or older; must be officially out of regular day school; must present two small (1x1) pictures, copy of birth certificate or other citizenship document, and must fill out application forms.

Interested residents may call 774-0100 ext. 3060 or 773-5488 for further information.

Now in their 70's, the Waters have slowed down "just a bit, but I'll never give up my ministry on St. Croix. We're known as 'Mommy' and 'Daddy' in the church and we think of the members as 'our precious people,'" said Waters.

The work of Lillian and Paul Waters lives on in their five children, four are pastors and one is a church singer, and shows signs of continuing in their nine grandchildren: one grandson is already a pastor. The 11 great-grandchildren are still too young to decide.

"Children are a heritage from God," said Waters. "They are our rose garden. Take out the weeds, keep it worked, tend it. The plants will grow up to be beautiful flowers."

The twin-island Caribbean state is a major trans-shipment point for illicit drugs entering North America.

The government of Prime Minister Patrick Manning has launched an offensive aimed at stemming the flourishing trade.

Both the United States and Canada are assisting the efforts of the Manning government.

A team of Scotland Yard officials from London has been in Trinidad for almost a year helping local authorities to tackle the menace. They are also attempting to wipe out corruption in the local police force.

In a report the officials submitted to National Security Minister Russell Huggins a few months ago, they claimed "a hard core group" of policemen was receiving financial rewards for protecting drug lords.

The government is attempting to restructure the 5,000-force which is now under mounting public criticism.

commissioner, negotiations between the company, the PSC and the government bogged down until three weeks ago.

Under the threat of a court action for injunctive relief by the PSC, Lt. Governor Derek M. Hodge brought VITELCO President David Sharp and Commission Council Maria Tankenson Hodge to an out-of-court settlement.

Under the agreement, the full cost of implementing the system, as well as a portion of the expense of operating the staffing the 911 service over the next four years, is to be absorbed by VITELCO and not passed on to rate payers either as part of the rate base or as an expense for rate-making purposes.

The "enhanced 911" system will permit emergency operator/dispatchers to identify the telephone number of the emergency caller and, by accessing a data base, the geographical location of the phone..

In a later phase, even more detailed information about the residents of the home from which the emergency call is made will be displayed on the dispatcher's screen. Such information could include location maps and directions for responding vehicles, whether residents are handicapped or otherwise impaired, special medical information, and other vital emergency data.

payment, and civil trials might resume by the second week in July, according to sources.

But criminal trials must go forward because defendants rights to a speedy trial are guaranteed by the sixth amendment.

The Administrative Office for U.S. Courts set aside enough money to ensure that juries sitting on criminal trials would be paid, according a Courts Office spokesman.

Local lawyers say the delays cost a lot of money and cause a lot of problems.

"Most civil trials of any consequence require the testimony of off-island expert witnesses and it can be difficult to rearrange everyone's schedule at the last minute," said attorney Bernard Pattie.

"I know that a lot of the legal community here are upset," said Pattie who was scheduled to begin a civil trial in District Court Monday.

While that sounds impressive, Flores is quick to point out that it means he is responsible for maintaining the outside of the ship and that it is a never-ending job.

Flores is also responsible for the 61 men and women in his unit, almost 25 percent of the crew of 260, and all of whom were expected at a pig roast later that afternoon at his parents' home.

The crew will be exploring St. Croix for four days while the ship is in port. Fishing, diving, and looking up old high school friends are on Flores' agenda.

The Truett is a training vessel for U.S. Navy reserve forces and goes to sea for an extended period only during the summer when the reserve units perform their annual training.

"We train three types of reserves," said Truett's Commander, David Austin.

"The primary type is the one that would get called up immediately if we went to war. Those sailors would augment the crew already in place [such as what occurred during the Gulf War].

"The secondary call up would be made only if there were a major conflict involving more than one area in the world.

"And the third reserve group would be called if ships were taken out of mothballs and needed crews."

Commander Austin and his crew invite the public to tour the U.S.S. Truett while it is in port. The ship will be open to visitors from 2:00 p.m. to 4:30 p.m. Monday through Wednesday.

The city put thousands of extra police officers on patrol and spent at least $1 million trying to prevent a repeat of the 1992 riots, when more than 1,000 people were arrested and 107 police officers were injured.

More than 100 people were arrested and dozens of stores were looted after the Bulls' first championship in 1991.

Three police officers suffered minor gunshot wounds and three others were hit by rocks and bottles during the celebrations that followed this year's championship.

Isolated looting was reported across the city, but police spokesman Bill Davis said he had no estimate on the losses.

Police said 682 people were arrested after the game. Of those, 164 were charged with felonies, mostly burglaries, according to the Cook County state's attorney's office. Police said earlier they knew of only 137 felony arrests.

Many Chicago residents decided to celebrate at home because they feared a repeat of last year's destruction.

"I just didn't want to be caught in the crossfire," said Yvette Pierce, a cashier at the Daley Center. "The killing and looting were unnecessary and senseless. To me, that was not a celebration; it was destruction."

McCoy said the hospital is making progress on its other main goal, recertification.

Federal recertification officials might be "invited" to evaluate the hospital in November, according to McCoy.

"But we have to document for the federal government all the changes we've made in the hospital," he said.

The hospital's uncertified status costs the facility " $3-$5 million a year in federal Medicaid and Medicare funds," according to McCoy.

The woman escaped from Geerman's van and ran naked to the security booth at Hess.

Geerman admitted having sex with the woman, but he said he offered her money and she consented. Geerman also told police he continued to have sex with her after she told him to stop. Geerman will be sentenced by visiting District Court judge Stanley S. Brotman.

The federal judiciary's overall budget rose from $2.3 billion last year to $2.47 billion this year, but salaries and expenses consumed the bulk of the increase, up $110 million, according to Sellers.

The $70 million set aside for juror pay last year fell to $68.8 million this year, although the courts had requested $74 million, Sellers said. Funds available for attorneys' fees fell from $221 million to $215 million while the courts had sough $310 million.

If the courts get the amounts currently in the supplemental spending bills, the total for fiscal 1993 ending Sept. 31 would be $74.3 million for jurors and $270 for attorneys.

Court-appointed attorneys usually receive $40 an hour for work out of court and $60 an hour for work in court, but 16 court districts pay them $75 an hour in or out of court, Sellers said.

Police seek help in hunt for gay-killer

LONDON (AP) - Police handed out 10,000 leaflets at a gay march Saturday seeking help in their hunt for a serial killer who has targeted homosexuals.

The leaflets bear photographs of five men strangled or suffocated in their London homes since March 8, and urge men to be careful when picking up partners.

"Always tell a friend who you are leaving with and where you are going," the leaflets say.

Some 50,000 gay men and lesbians joined the march in London marking the 21st annual Lesbian and Gay Pride Day. They gathered later for a concert in a south London park.

"We are not going to let the serial killer spoil the fun," said gay activist Peter Tatchell.

Violence mars Bulls victory

CHICAGO (AP) - For the third straight year, violence marred celebrations that broke out when the Chicago Bulls won the NBA championship. Two people were killed and nearly 700 arrested as the city sent thousands of extra police into the streets.

Random gunfire was heard across the city late Sunday and early Monday after the Bulls beat the Phoenix Suns 99-98 to win their third consecutive title.

Mayor Richard M. Daley said police "did an excellent job" of keeping things under control. But he added: "There's thugs and there's criminals and ... there's dope dealers and they'll take advantage of anything."

Most of the people arrested were charged with burglary and disorderly conduct, but a few incidents resulted in death or serious injury.

At one intersection, a crowd pulled drivers from their cars, shot one man to death and stabbed another.

"A group of thugs started dragging people out of cars," Sgt. Lee Epplen said.

Julio Castillo, an 18-year-old passenger in one of the cars, was killed. Castillo's friend, 17-year-old Oswaldo Arroyo, was stabbed in the back and was recovering at home on Monday.

"They used the victory as an excuse to go out and do what they want," Arroyo said of the attackers.

The other person who died as a result of the celebrations was 26-year-old Rosalind Slaughter, who was hit by a stray bullet while standing on a porch outside her South Side home.

Two other young women were shot as they were hanging out of the sunroof of a moving car.

"It's just senseless," Sgt. Wilson McGee said.

Despite the violence, the city said a victory party featuring all of the Bulls would go on as scheduled Tuesday in Grant Park.

Thousands of fans greeted the Bulls when their flight arrived at O'Hare International Airport about 3 a.m. Monday.

"How's the city? The city ain't torn up, is it?" Michael

IN BASEBALL
Cardinals outhit Marlins, 4 to 3

MIAMI (AP) - Joe Magrane won his fourth consecutive start and Gregg Jefferies hit his 10th home run, leading the St. Louis Cardinals past the Florida Marlins 4-3 Monday night.

The Cardinals climbed to 10 games over .500 for the first time this season. Florida has lost seven of eight since sweeping a four-game series against Pittsburgh.

Magrane (6-6) gave up five hits in eight innings. He allowed only one earned run - on Jeff Conine's first-inning homer - and retired 12 in a row during one stretch.

Lee Smith gave up two hits and a run in the ninth but still earned his 24th save, the most in the majors. Orestes Destrade drove home the run with a sacrifice fly, but with the potential tying run at second base, Junior Felix struck out and Dave Magadan lined out to right to end the game.

The red-hot Jefferies put St. Louis ahead in the first inning with a solo home run, his 10th of the season. It was just the third homer against Luis Aquino (4-5) in 74 2-3 innings this season.

Jefferies also singled and is hitting .448 in his past 16 games.

Todd Zeile doubled home two runs against Aquino in the third, then scored on a single by Tom Pagnozzi.

The Cardinals missed several other scoring chances. They reached Aquino for four hits in the second inning but no runs, partly because Mark Whiten was thrown out trying to stretch a single into a double.

Aquino, who has been bothered by a sore right shoulder, gave up four runs and 10 hits in 3 1-3 innings, his shortest outing as a starter this season.

The right-hander's ERA climbed from 2.65 to 3.01.

See Lofton run
Cleveland too speedy for Brewers

CLEVELAND (AP) - Tommy Kramer loves watching Kenny Lofton run.

Lofton, Cleveland's speedy center fielder, chased down seven fly balls Monday night to help preserve a shutout as Kramer and the Indians beat the Milwaukee Brewers 3-0.

"Kenny practically ran a marathon out there," Kramer said. "If it wasn't for Kenny, I probably would have been out of the game in the third inning."

Instead, Kramer lasted 7 1-3 innings, blanking the Brewers on four hits until giving way to Jeremy Hernandez in the eighth. Hernandez got the last five outs, fanning four, for his second save.

Lofton made a spectacular over-the-shoulder catch of Robin Yount's fly ball to the warning track in the second inning, then raced in to snag Juan Bell's shallow fly with a runner at third in the third. He also outran Greg Vaughn's fly to the warning track in the sixth.

"Kenny made a great catch on Yount," Kramer said. "If that gets down, anything can happen."

Carlos Baerga and Albert Belle backed Kramer with home runs. Belle also hit a sacrifice fly, and he and Baerga now share the team lead with 58 RBIs each.

Kramer (3-2) outpitched Jaime Navarro and sent the Brewers to their third straight loss, walking three and striking out four before manager Mike Hargrove pulled him. Hargrove was booed loudly as he returned to the dugout.

"I'm just glat they don't give guns to fans, because I'd have looked like Swiss cheese," Hargrove said. "It wasn't popular with the fans, and I understand that he pitched a heck of a game. He ran out of gas. His first five pitches in the inning were balls, and his velocity was down from 87 to 83."

Navarro (5-4) gave up three runs and eight hits in his third complete game but saw his personal five-game winning streak end. He stayed in the game after getting hit hard on the right shoulder by Paul Sorrento's line drive in the second inning.

"He did a super job," manager Phil Garner said. "He took a bullet off hit shoulder. Fortunately, it didn't hit him on the bone. If it did, it would have broken his shoulder. It hit him on the flesh part. But he's going to be sore tomorrow."

The loss pushed the Brewers nine games under .500 for the first time since Aug. 20, 1991.

Baerga led off the fourth inning with his 13th home run, slipping it just inside the foul pole in right field.

White suspends six NL players

NEW YORK (AP) - National League president Bill White suspended six players on Monday for three beanball incidents, two of them involving the Los Angeles Dodgers.

Rick Trlicek of the Dodgers and Gary Sheffield of the San Diego Padres were suspended for three games each for an episode on June 10. Trlicek hit Sheffield with a pitch and the Padres' third baseman charged the mound, touching off a bench-clearing brawl.

Jose Bautista of the Chicago Cubs was suspended for three games for intentionally throwing at and hitting Mark Carreon of the San Francisco Giants after a warning had been issued in the game June 11.

Ramon Martinez of the Dodgers was suspended for five games for hitting Charlie Hayes of the Colorado Rockies, triggering a bench-clearing brawl June 15. Hayes was suspended for three games for fighting after he was hit by the pitch.

Later in that game, another brawl occurred when, after a warning from the umpires, Keith Shephard of the Rockies hit Cory Snyder with a pitch. Shephard was suspended for seven games by White.

All the suspended players also were fined undisclosed amounts. All except Shephard have appealed and will continue to play pending hearings.

Cubs 5, Pirates 1

PITTSBURGH (AP) - Jose Bautista won as a starter for the first time in four years, pitching four-hit ball over eight innings Monday to lead the Chicago Cubs over the Pittsburgh Pirates 5-1.

Sammy Sosa's three-run triple followed Bautista's first major league hit in a four-run second inning as the Cubs stopped Pittsburgh's four-game winning streak, a season high. The game took just 1 hour, 56 minutes.

Bautista (2-1), making only his second start in 21 appearances this season, retired his first 10 batters and didn't allow a runner to second until Jeff King's leadoff double in the fifth. Ben Shelton's first career home run came in the eighth and ended Bautista's bid for his first career shutout.

Bautista, making only his 37th major league start in 13 seasons of professional baseball, struck out seven and walked none. He last won as a starter on June 17, 1989, for Baltimore against Oakland, and got his second victory overall since Sept. 24, 1990.

Zane Smith (0-2), making his second start since nearly a year's layoff for shoulder surgery, allowed four runs and six hits in six innings. After Steve Lake's double and Bautista's single on the wet turf between first and second, Chicago went ahead on an RBI single by Rey Sanches and Sosa's triple. Sosa is 7 for 21 in his last five games with seven runs scored, four homers and 11 RBIs.

TV Vision

CBS brings fine "Liar, Liar" to U.S.

BY STEVEN A. MCGAW

One of last year's best made-for-television films was a Canadian import titled "Journey Into Darkness: The Bruce Curtis Story." Sadly, it was also one of the most poorly advertised and lightly watched films of the year.

Here's hoping CBS realizes what a gem it has in "Liar, Liar," and promotes it accordingly. Scheduled to air Tuesday, June 22, the Canadian Broadcasting Corp. production offers topicality, fine acting and a carefully crafted script that avoids the predictability and stultifying sameness that mark most made-for-TV movie fare.

The film's earliest glimpse of the Farrow family tells us we're on the right track. Far from the happy ciphers of TV-land, the Farrows are real people with real problems. Gil (Art Hindle) is an out-of-work Vancouver shipbuilder. His wife, Mary (Rosemary Dunsmore), is doing her best to meet the dual responsibilities of making a living and running a household.

In 22 years of marriage, Gil and Mary have produced four children, three of whom still live at home; the eldest daughter, played by Janne Mortil, has her own child and husband. ("She slept her way into a marriage," her father says ruefully.) The oldest at home is 11-year-old Kelley (Vanessa King), a fiery-tempered, often disagreeable child known for fibbing and who seems to delight in taunting her goody-goody little sister (Ashley Rogers) and a little brother (Joel Palmer) who almost never speaks.

One night, Kelley is caught playing a familiar trick: locking her brother in the upstairs bathroom. Gil declares he's "had enough" of her bad behavior and banishes the rest of the family downstairs, taking Kelley in the bathroom to punish her. Long after the family has gone to bed, a tearful, shaken girl crawls into bed, saying simply to her younger sister, "I hate him."

A few days later, Kelley shocks her school counselor with a calmly stated revelation: that night in the bathroom, her father molested her, as he had many times before. The school official moves quickly, and by nightfall Gil is arrested and formally charged. Kelley is examined by medical authorities and, though the results are indeterminate, the legal machinery moves forward to bring the case to trial.

Kate Nelligan ("Eleni") plays the prosecutor whose concern for Kelley is mingled with a desire to further her own career. Gil's defense attorney (Susan Hogan) is equally determined and ambitious. Asked by Gil if she believes in his innocence, she curtly replies, "That's not relevant to my case."

The real triumph of "Liar, Liar" is that its central issue is as simple as its title; whom to believe? Either Kelley or Gil is lying, that much is certain, but the film provides viewers with a rare journey through stereotypes, hearsay and their own prejudices. It is a challenging, surprising film not to be missed.
